The easing in money rates yesterday was sufficient to demonstrate that the buying power of the market has not yet been exhausted. Prices were run up quickly, some stocks, such as Tobacco Products, attaining new high levels. There was a disposition to consider that the easing of money rates indicated that retrenchment for the July 1 requirements had been completed, and that from now on there would be no return to the 10 and 15 per cent. rates. It was quite overlooked that the warning against wild speculation by the Federal Reserve Board was still a market factor. The first money stringency was termed artificial and if that be true it proves beyond question that the Federal Reserve Board is in position to enforce its recommendations as related to the money market.

Du Pont Investments.

Ever since the acquisition of a large block of General Motors stock there have been rumors that the du Ponts were associating themselves with other companies. Yesterday United States Rubber was mentioned as one of these. This was apparently for no other reason than that the movement of the stock to as high as 132 is explainable by no ordinary formula. Good earnings and large assets behind the common would presumably long since have lost their efficacy as market influences. Rubber as yet pays no dividend, and the initial one, whenever that is declared, will have to be large to warrant a price of more than 130. There seems to be no definite information on the subject of whether the du Ponts are buying United States Rubber. It is not illogical on the other hand, to consider that some of their surplus funds might find their way into this issue.

Copper Shares Strong.

Nearly all of the copper issues were in demand yesterday with Cerro de Pasco the leader. This issue has been quite in the limelight for the last three days, the gain having amounted to something in the neighborhood of ten points, which is quite a substantial move considering the relatively quiet tone that has prevailed throughout the copper group. The chief interest in Cerro de Pasco is that it is a low cost producer because of the high content of silver in the ore, which it is said almost pays for the cost of mining operations. The improved price for copper has been the signal for some buying of the copper stocks. Memory does not always recall that there is a big stock of metal on hand, taken out of the ground at high cost, which must be disposed of before there can be an increase in production from the present level.

A Future Possibility.

Local shipping men received the report from Washington that the deliveries of vessels to the United States Shipping Board in this month neared the 100 mark without particular surprise. This, they say, is an indication of the actual productive power of the shipyards of the country, and should result in the United States Merchant Marine assuming the future leadership of the world. At the same time, they assert that remedial legislation, which will allow a fair return on the money put into ships, is vital to allow the expansion of the American Merchant fleet on a proper scale.

This Port Gains Trade.

The lifting of shipping restrictions, and the return to more normal port conditions in New York Harbor, are showing their effect in the recovery by this port of a fair share of the losses it suffered last year in the handling of foreign commerce because of the war. In 1917 about half of the total foreign commerce of the country was handled through the Port of New York, but this fell off considerably in 1918 when the Government diverted a large tonnage to other Atlantic Ports in order to prevent a general tieup here, as well as to meet the labor troubles of last Winter. That diverted traffic is apparently returning to New York, and it is estimated conservatively that half of the foreign commerce of the country is now being handled through New York Harbor.

A Prosperity Indicator.

That the American shipping world sees prosperity ahead and believes that the Government will adopt a policy which will allow continued expansion of our merchant marine, and that shipping is prosperous is indicated by the fact that for the first time since the membership of the New York Maritime Exchange has been limited to 1,200 members premiums are now being paid to obtain memberships. Applicants have to bid against each other and the membership price now has been established at the $200 mark.

The Equipment Trust Plan.

The Car Allocation Committee of the Association of Railway Executives met yesterday and decided to mail copies of the plan presented to them by the special committee of bankers, of which Jerome J. Hanauer of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., is Chairman, to all of the member roads. It is understood that Director General of Railroads Walker D. Hines has received a copy also and that the text will be made public as soon as the Railroad Administration reaches a decision upon the matter.

Back to 1,000,000 Shares.

In the early trading in yesterday's stock market it appeared as if most of the activity was for the professionals, but later on the public came back again and the closing hours were sufficiently busy to swell the total sales for the day to more than 1,200,000 shares as compared with considerably less than 1,000,000 shares on the two preceding days. The resumption of trading on a broad scale was attributed in some quarters to easier money, but others who have recently been in the Middle West and the South were inclined to believe that a great deal of the buying power is out of town. They say that the Middle West particularly is especially interested, and that when the farmers begin to market their crops the supply of funds will be increased. One man who has just returned from a trip through Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio said yesterday that in those States the speculating fever was continuing to grow.

Railroad Shares Dull.

With the exception of a continuation of the selling in Baltimore & Ohio which forced the issue down for a further net loss of more than 2 points yesterday and an advance of more than a point by both New Haven and Texas & Pacific, the railroad shares were very dull throughout the trading session. Gains and losses were mostly fractional and individual turnovers with few exceptions were for only a part of the usual volume of business.

TO WORK TEXAS OIL LAND.

Incorporation of Simms Petroleum Company of Delaware Announced.

The incorporation of the Simms Petroleum Company of Delaware was announced in the financial district yesterday. The new concern will have a capital of 500,000 shares of stock, of no par value, of which 425,000 shares will be issued immediately. It has no bonds nor preferred stock. The company owns the entire capital stock, excepting Directors' qualifying shares, of the Simms Oil Company of Texas, which owns more than 420,000 acres of oil lands in that State, many of which are located in the Ranger oil field. Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne have formed a syndicate to underwrite 144,000 shares of stock of the new company, and the proceeds of the sale will be used for development purposes.

Harry Bronner, President of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, will be the Chairman of the board of the new concern and E. F. Simms, Vice President of the Sinclair Gulf Corporation, will be its President. Mr. Simms obtained the leases held by the Texas corporation. Both he and Mr. Bronner will also be Directors in the company. Other members of the board will be Frank H. Bethell, Vice President of the New York Telephone Company; Edward Cornell, O. L. Gubelman, S. T. Morgan, Henry Oliver, William H. Reid, Frederick W. Scott, John T. Scott, Finley J. Shepard, Ernest Stauffen, and John J. Watson.

Mr. Simms has been identified with the development of Texas oil fields for more than twenty years, and was the organizer and President of the Freeport and Tampico Fuel Oil Corporation, which was later merged into the Sinclair Gulf Corporation. He is also President of the Freeport Sulphur Company and the Universal Sulphur Products Company.

The leases owned by the Texas Corporation are located in twenty counties in that State and were acquired chiefly in 1917 and 1918. Geologists' reports on the property are stated to be favorable.

BIG WHEAT CROP IN KANSAS.

TOPEKA, Kan., June 27.—The Kansas Winter wheat crop, now being harvested, was estimated at 229,217,000 bushels in the monthly report issued today by J. C. Mohler, Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture. This is an increase of more than 11,000,000 bushels over Mohler's May report, and it is approximately 33,000,000 bushels greater than the last Federal monthly report.

Today's report on conditions found on June 21 forecasts an acre yield of 19.8 bushels as compared with 20.1 bushels, the May estimate.

For the first time an estimate is placed on the 1919 Spring wheat in Kansas, which is estimated to yield 448,000 bushels, bringing the total all wheat yield of the State this year up to 229,665,000 bushels. The report adds:

"The total production promised this year is nearly equal to the State's three wheat crops of 1916, 1917, and 1918, combined, and is 48,292,000 bushels in excess of the State's yield of 1914, which has stood until now as the record crop of any State in the United States."

The condition of the crop based on 100 per cent. of normal is given as 92.4 per cent., a decrease of 5.6 per cent. during the past month, due to excessively hot weather.

COTTON AT NEW HIGH LEVELS FOR SEASON

BIG BUYING AT THE START.

Prices in Orderly Decline Toward the Close—Weather News in Favor of the Bulls.

Another big bulge in the cotton market yesterday morning carried the list up to new high levels for the season and took every option as far distant as January up to or above the 34 cent price. This is the first time this year that futures have sold as high as 34 cents, although New York spot, which reacted 20 points yesterday, sold within 5 points of 35 cents on Thursday. In the afternoon, after the high records had been established, profit-taking on rather a large scale brought about a reaction which took the new crop months back to about Thursday's closing and at the end of the day these contracts were 5 points down to 2 points up. July finished down 25 points on the day.

Big buying set in at the start and quotations on the first call showed advances ranging from 5 points in July to 23 in January. After that throughout the morning the market continued to advance, going up for net gains of 62 to 73 points for the new crop months, while July, of the old crop, lagged behind. There were few if any notices against July moving, but the option held back on the morning rise, being crossed for the first time by October, while December sold within 10 points of the July high.

In the afternoon the high prices attracted a good deal of profit-taking, and some sales were reported for Liverpool account. Between the two the market was forced down to about Thursday's closing level, but the decline was very orderly and did not affect the market's undertone. The close was at or very close to the low prices of the day.

The weather news was again all in favor of the bulls. There were heavy rains over Georgia and Texas and unfavorable weather elsewhere. Publication of three private crop reports also helped the bulls. The Jay report made the condition 69.9, while the Norden report placed it at 71.6, the highest of any of the unofficial reports. The Southern Products Company, which came so extremely close to the Government figures last month, made the condition 69.3, the lowest of any thus far, and gave rise to a general revision of the estimates of what the Government report will show on Tuesday. At the close last night, most trade and market authorities were predicting a figure of anywhere from 69 to 70.

Exports for the week were large, totaling 110,360 bales from all ports. This is below the total for last week, when 157,741 bales went forward, but was considered an entirely satisfactory total.

WOULD FIX 3 CENTS TRANSFER CHARGE

ASKS FOR PROMPT ACTION

Charge Would Be Made at 99 Points, with Estimated Revenue of $900,000.

The expected application of Job E. Hedges, receiver of the New York Railways Company, to the Public Service Commission for authority to charge 2 cents for transfers was received by the commission late yesterday. At the hearing before Federal Judge Mayer on Wednesday on the question of separating the Eighth and Ninth Avenue lines from the system because of failure to pay the rentals, the statement was made that if Public Service Commissioner Lewis Nixon granted the company permission to charge 3 cents for transfers the revenues of the company would be increased about $900,000 a year. This, it was asserted, would go a long way toward solving the problem of operating the company's lines at a profit instead of at a loss.

It was also said that Mr. Nixon had written to Mr. Hedges to the effect that hearings would be given on an application for permission to charge for transfers, and explained the delay of the former commission in acting on the matter to the unusual conditions caused by the war. While Mr. Nixon has not expressly said that he would grant such an application, the intimation has been that he would rather help the various railroad corporations in the city to earn enough to pay operating expenses than to see them fall below the point of being able to provide adequate service to the public through lack of means to keep the property in good condition.

In his application, Mr. Hedges asks for the privilege of charging 3 cents for transfers at ninety-nine transfer points, which would leave only fourteen points where free transfers would be given. These fourteen are those prescribed in the franchises and cannot be abrogated without the consent of the Board of Estimate.

Mr. Nixon set the first hearing on the application at 2:30 o'clock on Monday afternoon. In his application Mr. Hedges says:

"The statement of earnings for the past six months, now in the hands of the Receiver, shows the existence of an emergency which is likely to entirely disintegrate the property unless some relief is at once afforded. The whole purpose of the application would be defeated unless the relief requested be given without the delay attendant upon such proceedings in the past."

The brief accompanying the application says that the Commission has power to grant the authority asked for, and then it reads:

"If a charge of 3 cents were made at these ninety-nine points, it would produce a revenue approximating, but not exceeding, $900,000. * * * If this additional maximum of $900,000 were obtained, the total income of the New York Railways System above operating expenses and taxes, and disregarding all reserves for surplus or contingencies, and disregarding all fixed charges, would amount to not exceeding $1,300,000 per annum."

Figures in the application show that the average rate of fare actually received by the company during the four years up to the close of 1916, owing to the giving of free transfers, had been materially reduced, and from the standpoint of cash each individual line of the system represented a cash fare of only 3.49 cents received from each passenger. For the six months ended March 31, 1919, the system earned only $180,000 above its operating expenses, the application says, without any allowance for reserve or fixed charges. It also says that while there has been an appreciable increase in passenger traffic in recent months, this increase has been more than offset by increases in operating expenses. On its constituent lines, the application says, the company has fallen many thousands of dollars short of earning its fixed charges.

Defer Interest Payment.

Interest due July 1 on the bonds and mortgages of the surface lines of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company's system will be deferred for an indefinite period, it was said yesterday. The interest, totaling something more than $900,000, would probably be paid in three months, it was stated, or the payment might be deferred for a longer period. The surface companies which will defer the interest payments are the Brooklyn Heights and the Brooklyn City, which will owe about $450,000 on July 1, and the Nassau Electric, the Brooklyn, Queens County, and Suburban, and the Coney Island and Brooklyn, which will owe about the same amount of interest.

The meaning in United Retail Stores CORPORATION

In May and June, 1912, Dow, Jones & Co. in its financial news bulletins and The Wall Street Journal expounded the principles under the UNITED CIGAR STORES CO.

Retail Stores as Investments

Until recently railroad transportation was the expanding business of the United States, absorbing the major portion of the accumulating investment funds of the country. Now capital is turning steadily to industrial enterprises.

President Whelan, of the United Cigar Stores Co., to which the Supreme Court has just given a clean bill of health by forcing out the American Tobacco Co. and twenty-eight co-defendants from ownership therein, tells his friends that manufacturing and retailing are the only lines left for profitable enterprise.

He has backed his opinion with his fortune and purchased from the defendant litigants all their remaining United Cigar Stores Co. shares at under $200 per share, thus assuring himself practical control of the business he has been all his life developing.

What his profit in the future may be is not of such general interest as is a valuation of the business principles which enable this company to cut the prices of standard goods 15 to 20 per cent., proclaim that a nickel in the dollar is all the retail profits it seeks, and yet maintain the faith that retailing is to be in this country one of the great bases for investments.

United Retail Stores

"Retail business is the biggest business in the world," said George J. Whelan in May, 1912, as he landed from the Lusitania after a four-months trip in England. During this trip the cables were kept warm and his interests in United Cigar Stores were very much increased as the decision of the Supreme Court dissolved its conection with the American Tobacco Co.

In June, 1912, Dow, Jones & Co. and The Wall Street Journal and their allied financial publications expounded the principles underlying the organization of the United Cigar Stores Co. The stock was then selling at under $210 per share. Soon after it sold at $260. Later each stockholder received in reorganization three shares for one.

The quotation of United Cigar Stores made this month of $167 per share means $501 per share for the old stock upon which present stockholders are receiving $27 per share as formerly held. Through peace and war it has maintained and increased its dividends.

The proposal now under consideration is to enlarge the scope of the organization, give two shares for each present share outstanding and still further solidify the investment base under the concern.

To this end, United Retail Stores Corporation has been organized, and George J. Whelan, James B. Duke and their associates have initially paid in $70 per share in cash for the first 50,000 shares of the new company. The capital is to be expanded by the issue of two shares for each of the 270,000 shares of United Cigar Stores stock and possibly later the holders of $4,500,000 United Cigar Stores 7% preferred stock will be glad to exchange for Retail Stores share for share.

The new stock will have no par value. There will also be issued founders' stock to take the place of the present bonus plan in operation in the management of United Cigar Stores.

This plan is novel and is destined to attract wide attention. It is in effect a profit-sharing plan for those who are expected to build up and expand the organization and continue with it. The stock will be sold to such at $5 per share and it will receive the regular dividends paid upon the other shares. But employes can not sell this stock except to the company, which will buy the same in the event of the death of the beneficiary, paying therefore the market price of the regular stock and also for any value shown in such shares above the market price.

This plan gives the beneficiary immediate insurance valuable to his family or his estate. It is in effect his contract and bonus. If he received this stock under contract and paid therefor $5 per share and died the next day, his family or estate would immediately receive for each share $100, if that was the market price for the vendable shares.

His incentive is therefore to upbuild the trade and good-will of this company and give value to these shares quoted this week at $84 and which are expected to be in the future steadily appreciating premium certificates.

United Cigar Stores will keep its trade-mark and organization and as such will seek to secure more than its present $65,000,000 gross of the $1,200,000,000 tobacco business in this country.

But the interesting feature of the new organization is that the United Cigar Stores becomes only one branch in the general plan of the Retail Stores organization, which proposes unlimited expansion in the general retail business.

United Retail Stores Corporation is organized to hold and develop companies with valuable going trade-marks.

The fundamental principle of the new concern is that it will never buy a business without the men, the organization and value in the same with trade-marked and popular articles.

It will also have the same principles as those underlying the success of the United Cigar Stores. It will not be a promotion to be floated. It is to be directed and managed by the men who have their fortunes and their future in it.

It has been the life ambition of George J. Whelan to expand into a larger retail organization. It is the present ambition of James B. Duke—for whom increment of wealth can hold little attraction—to wrestle with the problem of distribution of goods with reduced cost to the consumer.

Mr. Whelan and his family propose to turn into the new company 65,000 shares of United Cigar Stores stock and take 130,000 shares of the new Retail Stores Corporation, and he believes in so doing he is perpetuating and enlarging his life work and giving continuity to the same upon an investment basis.

Indeed, he has expressed a desire that as United Cigar Stores disappears from Wall Street, so in time may the shares of the Retail Stores Corporation disappear from Wall Street and represent entirely a business investment proposition managed by the workers and largely owned by them.

The United Cigar Stores never had a director that was not a worker in the concern and Whelan and Duke will be the leading workers in the new Retail Stores Corporation.

The United States offers no sport for rich men like that of business development and the expanding of industrial and merchandising organizations building for the workers, the consumers and the investors.

The real estate department, with its success in selection of locations, was fundamental in the success of United Cigars. Business location, trade-marks and brain organizations are expected to continue its success in the new United Retail Stores Corporation.

It is just such careful financial news presentations and studies in values—and the business principles that make values—that have advanced the Dow, Jones & Co. financial bulletins and The Wall Street Journal to their present commanding position as the leading collectors and distributers of financial news in the United States.

While the Dow, Jones Electric Page Printer flashes the news by which financial centres all over the country are quickly informed on passing events, sound finance is not built from flashes, but from steady reading of the Dow, Jones & Co. bulletins, which go to make up The Wall Street Journal and constitute the investors' guide in finance.

The Dow, Jones & Co. bulletins and The Wall Street Journal should be daily read and studied by every man who hopes to be an intelligent investor.

These give all the facts and factors upon which fortunes are founded, and where these facts and factors are ignored, overlooked, forgotten, or not studied, fortunes are lost.

REAL ESTATE FIELD

Edward Margolies has purchased from Lewis Cass Ledyard, Jr., and the United States Trust Company, as trustees for the Livingston estate, the property at 309-311 Fifth Avenue, on plot 54 by 150 feet. It is on the east side of the avenue, south of Thirty-second Street. The transaction foreshadows the erection of a sixteen story loft building. Herbert A. Krapp, as architect, is preparing plans. The building is expected to be ready for occupancy next Spring.

The property is assessed at $430,000, and the selling price was close to that figure. It was an all cash transaction. The plot was assembled by the late Johnstone Livingston, who acquired it in 1899. Jay A. Lee and Pease & Elliman were the brokers.

Jay A. Lee and Pease & Elliman were the brokers.

Sale on Broad Street.

An important purchase involving about $350,000 in the financial district, where there has been a strong investment market for several months past owing to the lack of office room, was made yesterday by Frederick Brown, operator.

The property, which was sold by the United States Trust Company, as trustee for the Stevens estate, is known as 62 Broad Street. It consists of a four-story building, on a plot containing 4,650 square feet, located just north of the Morris Building, at the northwest corner of Broad and Beaver Streets. A resale of the property is reported to be pending, to a well-known Stock Exchange firm. The Charles F. Noyes Company negotiated the sale.

St. Bartholomew's Church Sold for $1,500,000.

The Fifth Church of Christ, Scientist, has purchased St. Bartholomew's Church, at the southeast corner of Madison Avenue and Forty-third Street, for a consideration said to be about $1,500,000.

Albert G. Milbank, as counsel to the Vestrymen of St. Bartholomew's, closed the transaction. The church structure, which is one of the most famous on the east side, has been on the market for many months, and has been reported sold on several occasions.

It is understood that the buyers will improve the site with a handsome new church edifice.

A Partner in Two Deals.

Harris and Maurice Mandelbaum resold the Hague dwellings, a seven-story apartment house, 100 by 100, renting for $22,000, at 347 Riverside Drive, opposite Grant's Tomb, which they purchased a month ago, to Samuel Wacht. The buyer immediately resold to an investor. Both transactions were negotiated by William S. Baker, and involved about $500,000.

Downtown Transactions.

OCTOBER, 1919,

AND FOR SENIOR ACCOUNTANT,

OCTOBER, 1920.

October 15 to November 15 is the period during which one-fourth of the year's business changes, readjustments and building up of staffs are made.

If you have a faculty for figures and the crude stuff for the making of an accountant, there is just about time between now and October 15th this year for you, thru suitable intensive training—during your spare hours at home—to qualify for a Junior Accountancy position that will pay at least $35 a week.

And ample time to qualify before October, 1920, for position of Senior Accountant, Auditor, or Income Tax Expert, at a salary of at least $75 a week—with possibilities of more than twice that amount.

It is only a question of raw ability and industry, a resolute purpose to devote five spare home hours a week to intensive training in accordance with the most successful business-training system ever devised, under the tutelage of a corps of eminent Certified Public Accountants who are renowned as practical teachers.

We have given hundreds of ambitious, earnest men and women the start that has put them over the top, and have their records to point to with just pride. We can do as much for you if you are made of the right stuff. It is worth your while to investigate.

HYLAN CRITICISES PURCHASE OF BATH

Finds Occasion to Comment on Previous Administration in Proposed Transaction.

WAS SOLD FOR $200

In the discussion over purchasing a floating bath in Brooklyn at the Board of Estimate meeting yesterday, Mayor Hylan commented on the late Mayor Mitchel's administration and incidentally the Citizens Union. The former he referred to as extravagant and the latter as letting the extravagance pass unnoticed. The matter came up when Borough President Riegelmann of Brooklyn sought $7,000 in corporate stock to buy and refit a bath, $3,500 of which sum was to be used to buy the bath. President Riegelmann said that the bath in question had formerly been owned by the city but had been sold by the preceding administration for $200.

"What," said the Mayor, "Do you mean to say that we are asked to pay $3,500 for a floating bath that once belonged to the city and was sold by the last administration for $200?"

"That is exactly the situation," said President Riegelmann.

"Why didn't they give it away," inquired the Mayor. "I hope that Mr. Wallstein and the Citizens Union will take notice that the floating bath was sold by the city for $200. I wonder Mr. Wallstein, the then Commissioner of Accounts, didn't investigate the sale?"

The matter was referred to the Committee on Finance and Budget. Borough President Dowling of Manhattan, who was a member of the last administration, explained that the bath was probably sold with others because the Board of Health had forbidden bathing in certain parts of the rivers surrounding the city.

A delegation of marketmen from Washington Market and the West Washington Market appeared before the board to protest against the new rules and regulations promulgated by Jonathan C. Day, Commissioner of Public Markets. According to the new rules permits are only granted for two weeks and rents must be paid every two weeks. The permits may be revoked if, in the opinion of the Commissioner, public interests require such action. The matter was referred to the Committee on Finance and Budget.

On the recommendation of the same committee the board approved the request of Police Commissioner Enright for the establishment of the grade of policewomen at $1,200 a year for ten additional incumbents.

The board adjourned to meet again on July 11. "The board may meet any time it wants to," said Mayor Hylan. "I will be here all Summer. I had my vacation last February."

"Yes, I read about it in the papers," said President Frank L. Dowling.

FOCH IN JULY 4 PARADE.

Poilus Will Also Carry Flags of Regiments That Fought in America.

PARIS, June 27, (Associated Press.)—Flags of all the French regiments which participated in the American Revolution will be carried by French soldiers in the Fourth of July parade here.

The parade, in which Marshal Foch, General Pershing, and Rear Admiral Harry S. Knapp of the American peace delegation will take part, will take place in the morning. It will pass along the Champs Elysées to the Place de la Concorde. Special games will be held in the afternoon at Pershing Stadium.

On the evening of July 3 General Pershing and Rear Admiral Knapp will be the guests of honor at a dinner and reception at the Hôtel de Ville.

Sulphur Showers in the Yukon.

DAWSON, Y. T., June 27.—A sulphur-laden shower of rain, a rare phenomenon, fell over Dawson and the surrounding country last night. A 30-minute downpour left pools and sidewalks streaked with a yellow substance which chemists said was sulphur and which they believed was carried in the upper atmospheric currents from some distant volcanic eruption. A similar precipitation has been reported at Eagle, 100 miles north of Dawson, and also in Northern British Columbia.

OPPOSES FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT WORK

TO ADOPT OFFICE SYSTEM

Will Name Committee to Standardize Occupations Along Labor Department's Lines.

The Board of Directors of the National Association of Employment Managers, representing employers of 7,000,000 men and women, met yesterday at the Hotel Pennsylvania for the election of officers and the adoption of a policy. The result of a referendum among the membership as to the desirability of retaining the United States Employment Service, as now organized and operated, was announced as being overwhelmingly in the negative, the vote being 34 in favor and 371 against.

The directors indorsed the work of the Inter-racial Council, which is bending its efforts toward the amalgamation of the various races among the employes. The President was authorized to appoint a committee to standardize office employment work, and as a step in the direction of general standardization the directors adopted the descriptions of occupations as developed by the United States Department of Labor for the selection of workers during the war. These standard descriptions will be used by employment managers for the same purpose in times of peace. Another committee will be appointed to establish co-operative relations with the National Association of Industrial Physicians, the National Association of Corporation Schools, and the National Safety Council.

While the Association of Employment Managers voted against the continuation of the Federal Employment Service, it split even on the proposition that State systems of employment services be continued without direct or indirect Federal control.

The association declared itself in favor of excepting Federal Directors of Employment in each State from civil service in case employes of the Employment Service are placed under either national or State civil service regulations, and of having employes of National Employment Service selected and promoted through the use of special tests and individual efficiency and not subject to civil service.

The officers elected for the ensuing year were: President, Philip J. Reilly, Dennison Manufacturing Company, Framingham, Mass.; Vice President, John C. Bower, Westinghouse Manufacturing Company, Pittsburgh, Penn.; Secretary, F. C. W. Parker, Central Y. M. C. A., Chicago, Ill.; Professor Joseph C. Willets, University of Pennsylvania; Executive Secretary, Mark M. Jones, Edison Industries, Orange, N. J.

FINISH CONFERENCE PLANS.

Final arrangements for the peace time conference of the Community Councils, to be held on July 12 at the home of Mrs. Frank A. Vanderlip, Scarborough, were completed yesterday at a luncheon given at the Bankers Club by George Gordon Battle, Chairman of Community Councils, and William C. Breed, Treasurer, of the same organization. At the luncheon Judge Morgan J. O'Brien, Mrs. Charles Cary Rumsey, Dr. John Hibbs Slaughter and Felix M. Warburg participated in the discussion. Former Attorney General George W. Wickersham will be the chief speaker at this conference, which will take up problems of reconstruction along democratic lines.

"Agitators are trying to line up the people of this country into two camps, the rich and the poor," said George Gordon Battle. "They have apparently forgotten that, so far, the greater number of people belong to the middle class, who will not line up with either the rich or the poor. As a result of this persistent class agitation this great body of human beings has suffered. It has become a buffer between two opposing factions.

"It is this vast number of men and women that community councils are now reaching and bringing into co-operative relations with the two extremes. The quiet, self-respecting and thoughtful resident of every type of neighborhood is joining with ever growing avidity the one organization that has to offer a vehicle through which local interests can be pushed on thoroughly democratic lines. It has been owing to the nature of the councils in that they form a meeting without regard to sex, class, or creed, that their success has been so great. As a result there are now eighty-two councils in New York, and new ones are in process of organization."

MAY ASK BORAH TO TESTIFY.

Creel and Others Likely to be Called in the Townley Trial.

JACKSON, Minn., June 27.—James E. Gillespie, a banker from Stillwater, Minn., testifying today at the trial of A. C. Townley and Joseph Gilbert, Non-Partisan League leaders, charged with seditious conspiracy, declared that Townley in a political speech at Stillwater on Feb. 19 of this year defended the red flag and declared that it was the emblem of the oppressed.

"He said there was a bill in Minnesota to prohibit the use of the red flag," testified Mr. Gillespie, "and he said he knew only one animal that took exception to the flag, and that animal was inclosed in a fence. He said that the Russian administration was being carried on successfully and that that was their flag.

"At this point a Russian Jew, Isadore Lott, interrupted. Lott said he took exception to the red flag statement and declared that the American flag was good enough for him. Townley replied:

"'Gentlemen, look at this man here. Is he a Russian Jew?'

"The Mayor interrupted and said: 'Yes, he is, but he is an American citizen. He has two boys in the war.'

"Lott then asked Townley: 'How many boys have you in the war?'

"Townley got off the platform and that ended the meeting."

Gillespie admitted on cross-examination that he had been a close friend of the candidate who opposed the Non-Partisan nominee at the special election.

J. W. Foley testified along similar lines.

"Townley also declared," Foley testified, "that a red flag bill had been defeated in North Dakota, where Non-Partisan League majorities are in both houses. He said that Townley stated in his speech: 'We in North Dakota are not afraid of the red flag.'"

Attorneys for the defense announced this afternoon that they had decided to subpoena W. B. Colver, formerly of St. Paul, Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, to testify regarding the war profits of several corporations and that they are considering calling Senator Borah of Idaho, former Representative Jeanette Rankin of Montana, George Creel and Senator McLaurin of North Carolina, who heard Townley's address at St. Paul in 1917.

WILSON PROMISES TO ACT

THIS WILL TAKE 7 WEEKS

LIQUOR MEN UNPREPARED

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—President Wilson will not lift the ban which provides for war-time prohibition until the demobilization of the army has been terminated.

But when demobilization has been completed, the President will lift the ban. Formal announcement to this effect was made at the White House tonight. The President is in agreement with A. Mitchell Palmer, his Attorney General, that he cannot at this time lift the ban on wartime prohibition. He agrees with the Attorney General that the language of the law is such that he will be free to act on his own initiative, without Congressional action, not immediately after the signing of the treaty of peace, but when the army has been demobilized. As the army has not yet been demobilized, and there are yet a million men in the army, called into service under the emergency of war, the President, in the failure of Congress to vest him with power to call off wartime prohibition, takes the position that he cannot interfere with the putting of wartime prohibition into effect.

The responsibility for putting wartime prohibition into effect is put squarely up to Congress by the President. He takes the position that the law calling for wartime prohibition was an act of Congress, that its terms are clear, and that he had asked Congress to provide for the repeal of the legislation. Congress, having failed to act so far, has left the President's hands tied with legal strings so far as lifting the ban is concerned, and he makes this situation very plain in a cablegram sent to the White House just before he left Paris today.

President Wilson's cablegram was made public at the White House at 8 o'clock tonight by Joseph P. Tumulty, the Private Secretary to the President.

In his message the President said that he could not act until the army had been completely demobilized, and since there were still a million men in the service there was no chance of his taking immediate action. He called attention to the fact that the present difficulty could have been obviated if Congress had heeded his recommendation of several months ago.

The President in his message left no doubt as to what action he will take when demobilization is terminated.

"When demobilization is terminated," says the final sentence of his cablegram, "my power to act without Congressional action will be exercised."

When demobilization has been terminated will be determined by the President upon information to be supplied to him by Secretary Baker and by Attorney General Palmer. The prospects are that six, or perhaps seven, weeks will elapse before demobilization is terminated, which means that the President will probably not be in position, under his construction of the law, to act before the middle or latter part of August in lifting the ban.

It means that wartime prohibition will go into effect on July 1, even though there is no adequate provision legally made for its real enforcement, and that it will remain in effect until the termination of demobilization unless Congress meanwhile adopts the President's request for a repeal of the legislation which provided for the institution of wartime prohibition.

Congress is free at any time to enact the necessary legislation. So far all attempts to bring about repeal have failed on Capitol Hill and there is no present indication that Congress intends to change.

Not only has the President asked Congress to repeal the legislation standing in the way of lifting the ban, but in his cabled statement of today the President declares without equivocation that he will exercise his power to act when demobilization is terminated, and makes it clear he will then lift the ban unless Congress by repealing the act of Nov. 21, 1918, does away with wartime pro-

President Sends A Prohibition Message; Says He Will Act When Demobilization Ends

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The following message from President Wilson, stating his stand on the prohibition question, was made public at the White House tonight by Secretary Tumulty:

I am convinced that the Attorney General is right in advising me that I have no legal power at this time in the matter of the ban on liquor. Under the act of November, 1918, my power to take action is restricted. The act provides that after June 30, 1919, "until the conclusion of the present war and thereafter until the termination of demobilization, the date of which shall be determined and proclaimed by the President, it shall be unlawful, &c." This law does not specify that the ban shall be lifted with the signing of peace, but with the termination of the demobilization of the troops, and I cannot say that this has been accomplished. My information from the War Department is that there are still a million men in the army under the emergency call. It is clear, therefore, that the failure of Congress to act upon the suggestion contained in my message of the twentieth of May, 1919, asking for a repeal of the act of Nov. 21, 1918, so far as it applies to wines and beers, makes it impossible to act in this matter at this time. When demobilization is terminated, my power to act without Congressional action will be exercised.

BERLIN, June 28, (via Copenhagen.)—Vorwärts, even Die Freiheit and also Ledebour, in his first speech after his release from prison, earnestly warn the people against riots and political revolt which, in view of the enormous military strength gathered in Berlin, can only lead to awful bloodshed.

Doubtless the big leaders of the Independent Socialists do not wish any outbreaks at present. Nevertheless the air is charged with the spirit of rebellion, and nobody here would be surprised if tomorrow there were a repetition of the events of January and March on a much larger scale.

The minor leaders of the Independents, Communists and Sparticides desire to inflame this unrest, communicating it to ever-growing circles of the workers, and inciting the lawless elements to the most audacious and wholesale crimes. Unknown parties shortly after 2 o'clock this morning threw a bomb against the façade of the building of the Public Works Department. It exploded with a terrific noise, shattering about 200 windows. Nobody was hurt. Later, when the ministers and the railway employes' delegates left the building, after trying vainly all night to reach an agreement, unknown persons fired revolvers at the government members, without hitting any one.

Incite Lawlessness in Berlin.

Though ten or more members of the Executive Committee of the Berlin Soldiers and Workers' Councils, after being arrested yesterday on suspicion of conniving with the Hamburg revolutionists for the overthrow of the Federal Government, have been released for lack of evidence nobody doubts for one moment that telephone congratulations were exchanged between them and the Hamburg revolutionists, as overheard by officials, but the identity of the man who answered the Hamburg announcement of the successful revolt with "Bravo!" and promised the Executive Committee's aid in starting a revolt against the Government in Berlin could not be established.

Members of that Executive Committee have never made any secret of their intention to overthrow the Government at the first opportunity, and doubtless the weaker heads among them yesterday believed that the time had come. The lawless element believe this, and it cannot be denied that they are quite right, if the absence of any effective policing of the capital is any justification.

Insecurity has reached an incredible degree. Lately men disguised as officers have been ascending street cars and, with pointed revolvers, collecting pocketbooks and jewels from the passengers in true Wild West fashion. This

DUTCH UNWILLING TO GIVE UP KAISER

Majority of the People Firmly Opposed to Yielding to Allies' Demand.

Troelstra Says Chamber Would Surrender Ex-Ruler to Germany Only.

THE HAGUE, June 27.—The question of the delivery of the ex-Kaiser is again on the tapis here. There is no doubt that a majority of Netherlanders are already forgetting Germany's and the ex-monarch's record and violently oppose his surrender.

Appeals such as the recent one from the German Officers League and echoes from the German press only serve to strengthen these feelings. The officers' appeal stated that the German officers would be dishonored forever if Holland delivered the ex-Kaiser to the Allies, and ended with the statement: "It is even yet not certain whether a German can be found to sign the peace treaty."

The NEW YORK TIMES correspondent questioned Pieter Troelstra, the Socialist leader, the report emanating from Germany that the Dutch Social Democrats opposed the surrender of the ex-Kaiser. Troelstra replied:

"Our party has taken no official attitude. As we have not yet considered the question officially no resolution has been taken and no official correspondence carried on.

"It is true that we are against his surender on principle and would oppose it. I consider that we must wait until we receive the allied demand, so that the matter is not urgent.

"I can certainly say that as Socialists we believe in the right of asylum. English Socialists defend the right of asylum and London has always been a city for political refugees. Switzerland and the Netherlands have been free for centuries and it is a matter of tradition."

When asked if the question were put to a vote in the Dutch Chamber other parties would oppose the delivery of the ex-monarch, Troelstra replied in the affirmative.

"It is impossible," he said, "to deliver a refugee to an enemy. It is against all rights. If Germany should demand the Kaiser it would be another question. We should be in favor of that. I feel nothing but antipathy for his personality, but only his own Government has a right to demand him. I believe that all parties would vote in favor of a demand from the German Government."

LEAGUE OPPONENTS UNITING

Republican Senators Now Seem Agreed on Policy of Reservations.

McCUMBER IS WON OVER

SHANTUNG ACTION ASSAILED

Borah Calls It Indefensible—Norris Demands a Reservation Regarding It.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—With unexpected swiftness the Republican opposition in the Senate to the League of Nations covenant, as embraced in the Treaty of Peace, began to crystallize today, after the cables had brought word that Germany had signed the treaty, and that the President, in his message to the American people, had expressed the hope that the treaty would be "ratified and acted upon in full and sincere execution of its terms."

The President's message, coupled with his statement in interviews at Paris that he hoped the Senate would ratify the treaty with the League of Nations covenant in it, without amendment, had the effect, it appeared, of bringing closer the elements of opposition among the opponents of the League. Instead of influencing wavering Senators toward an attitude favoring the ratification of the League of Nations covenant, the President's appeal appeared to have exactly the opposite effect.

While the opponents of the covenants, before Germany signed, were admittedly divided as to a policy to pursue in fighting the covenant when the treaty should come before the Senate, they seemed, for the first time since the League fight started, to have come to some general agreement.

Every Republican Senator to whom THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent talked said decisively that he believed that, if the League covenant was to be accepted by the Senate some character of qualifying resolution would have to be passed, along with the treaty ratification, to express dissent from features objected to.

Even Senator McCumber of North Dakota, the one Republican member of the Foreign Relations Committee who has all along advocated adoption of the covenant, after the President's message had been read in the Senate, said that he believed it would be necessary for that body to adopt "explanatory reservations" in the ratification of the treaty, respecting features involved in the covenant. Mr. McCumber spoke of such reservations being necessary as to the Monroe Doctrine and the right of the United States to determine its purely domestic questions, like immigration, racial equality, and the tariff.

The North Dakota Senator made it clear that he would not favor any resolution of reservation that would have the effect of nullifying the covenant. He wanted the treaty of peace ratified, with the League of Nations included. But he insisted that the Senate should not hesitate to express its dissent from features that affected purely American affairs. If this were not done, he said, there might come some development in the future that might impel the Senate to take action which, in effect, would take America out of the League.

McNary for Interpretation.

Senator McNary, Republican, Oregon, who only a few days ago announced himself as favoring the League of Nations, declared today that he would not oppose a resolution that would enable opponents of the covenant to make clear their dissent from matters to which they objected. This, he said, might be done through a resolution of "interpretation," which was another way of saying one of "qualification."

At the same time Senator McNary agreed with Senator McCumber that no resolution ought to be adopted that would have the effect of rejecting the League of Nations covenant.

Talk of direct amendment of the covenant was not so insistent today among the more radical Senators. They appeared to be willing now to stand behind qualifying resolutions that would simply set forth the features subject to objection. They maintained, however, that Article X., guaranteeing the territorial integrity of members of the League, should come out. On this point

Wilson Says Treaty Will Furnish the Charter for a New Order of Affairs in the World

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The following address by President Wilson to the American people on the occasion of the signing of the Peace Treaty was given out here today by Secretary Tumulty:

My Fellow Countrymen: The treaty of peace has been signed. If it is ratified and acted upon in full and sincere execution of its terms it will furnish the charter for a new order of affairs in the world. It is a severe treaty in the duties and penalties it imposes upon Germany; but it is severe only because great wrongs done by Germany are to be righted and repaired; it imposes nothing that Germany cannot do; and she can regain her rightful standing in the world by the prompt and honorable fulfillment of its terms.

And it is much more than a treaty of peace with Germany. It liberates great peoples who have never before been able to find the way to liberty. It ends, once for all, an old and intolerable order under which small groups of selfish men could use the peoples of great empires to serve their ambition for power and dominion. It associates the free Governments of the world in a permanent League in which they are pledged to use their united power to maintain peace by maintaining right and justice.

It makes international law a reality supported by imperative sanctions. It does away with the right of conquest and rejects the policy of annexation and substitutes a new order under which backward nations—populations which have not yet come to political consciousness and peoples who are ready for independence but not yet quite prepared to dispense with protection and guidance—shall no more be subjected to the domination and exploitation of a stronger nation, but shall be put under the friendly direction and afforded the helpful assistance of governments which undertake to be responsible to the opinion of mankind in the execution of their task by accepting the direction of the League of Nations.

It recognizes the inalienable rights of nationality, the rights of minorities and the sanctity of religious belief and practice. It lays the basis for conventions which shall free the commercial intercourse of the world from unjust and vexatious restrictions and for every sort of international co-operation that will serve to cleanse the life of the world and facilitate its common action in beneficent service of every kind. It furnishes guarantees such as were never given or even contemplated for the fair treatment of all who labor at the daily tasks of the world.

It is for this reason that I have spoken of it as a great charter for a new order of affairs. There is ground here for deep satisfaction, universal reassurance, and confident hope.

DEPORT THIRTY 'RED' AGITATORS

Fifteen Have Been Shipped Away in a Week—18 More Waiting at Ellis Island.

MOST OF THEM ANARCHISTS

The deportation of alien agitators and conspirators who have abused their sojourn in America by preaching the overthrow of the United States Government, some of them coming under suspicion of the Secret Service for plots against President Wilson and other high public officials, has begun. Within the last seven days, fifteen of these disturbers, among them the editors of two anarchist newspapers, have been deported from New York, and eighteen others are now on Ellis Island awaiting the sailing of ships that will return them to the lands of their nativity.

The Secret Service agencies of the Government have been quietly, but thoroughly, at work for weeks, and every day or two a new batch of aliens who have urged the destruction of American institutions are rounded up and their records submitted to the proper authorities with a view to immediate deportation.

In the last four weeks thirty anarchist, I. W. W., and Bolshevist agitators have been deported by way of Ellis Island. This number does not include the Seattle and Spokane I. W. W. disturbers and other radicals who were sent East for deportation as a result of Bolshevist strikes in the Pacific Northwest several months ago. Some of those agitators also have been deported, and the cases of several others, recommended for the "homeward voyage," are soon to be decided by the courts.

Most of the deportations have taken place since bombs were set off at the homes of Attorney General Palmer and

AMERICA GREETED BY KING GEORGE

"Brothers in Arms Will Continue Forever to be Brothers in Peace."

SENDS MESSAGE TO WILSON

"We Lay Down Our Arms in Proud Consciousness of Valiant Deeds Nobly Done."

LONDON, June 28, (Associated Press.)—King George has sent the following message to President Wilson:

"In this glorious hour when the long struggle of nations for right, justice and freedom is at last crowned by a triumphant peace, I greet you, Mr. President, and the great American people in the name of the British nation.

"At a time when fortune seemed to frown, and the issues of the war trembled in the balance, the American people stretched out the hand of fellowship to those, who on this side of the ocean were battling for a righteous cause. Light and hope at once shone brighter in our hearts, and a new day dawned.

Together we have fought to a happy end; together we lay down our arms in proud consciousness of valiant deeds nobly done.

Mr. President, it is on this day one of our happiest thoughts that the American and British people, brothers in arms, will continue forever to be brothers in peace. United before by language, traditions, kinship, and ideals, there has been set upon our fellowship the sacred seal of common sacrifice. GEORGE, R. I.

After news of the signing of peace had been received here the following was issued over King George's signature:

The signing of the treaty of peace will be received with deep thankfulness throughout the British Empire. This formal act brings to its concluding stages the terrible war which has

CHINA REFUSES TO SIGN, SMUTS MAKES PROTEST

President Wilson Starts for Home

Mr. Wilson's party was accompanied to Brest by General Leorat and Colonel Lobez, the President's French aids, and also by Stephen Pichon, French Foreign Minister; Georges Leygues, French Minister of Marine, and Captain André Tardieu, a member of the French peace delegation. Ambassador Wallace, General Pershing, Premier Clemenceau, and Colonel House were at the station to say good-bye.

The crowd in the station, numbering upward of a thousand, wildly cheered the departure of the President, who raised his hat to cries of "Vive Wilson." Mrs. Wilson threw kisses to the crowd as the train departed.

The superdreadnought Oklahoma will accompany the George Washington to the United States.

VERSAILLES, June 28, (Associated Press.)—Germany and the allied and associated powers signed the peace terms here today in the same imperial hall where the Germans humbled the French so ignominiously forty-eight years ago.

This formally ended the world war, which lasted just thirty-seven days less than five years. Today, the day of peace, was the fifth anniversary of the murder of Archduke Francis Ferdinand by a Serbian student at Serajevo.

The peace was signed under circumstances which somewhat dimmed the expectations of those who had worked and fought during long years of war and months of negotiations for its achievement.

Absence of the Chinese delegates, who at the last moment were unable to reconcile themselves to the Shantung settlement, struck the first discordant note. A written protest which General Smuts lodged with his signature was another disappointment.

But bulking larger than these was the attitude of Germany and the German plenipotentiaries, which left them, as evident from the expression of M. Clemenceau, still outside of formal reconciliation and made the actual restoration to regular relations and intercourse with the allied nations dependent, not upon the signature of the "preliminaries of peace" today, but upon ratification by the National Assembly.

To M. Clemenceau's warning in his opening remarks that they would be expected, and held, to observe the treaty provisions loyally and completely the German delegates, through Dr. Haniel von Haimhausen, replied after returning to the hotel that had they known that they would be treated on a different status after signing than the allied representatives, as shown by their separate exit before the general body of the conference, they never would have signed.

Under the circumstances the general tone of sentiment in the historic sitting was one rather of relief at the uncontrovertible end of hostilities than of complete satisfaction.

The ceremony had been planned deliberately to be austere, befitting the sufferings of almost five years, and the lack of impressiveness and picturesque color, of which many spectators, who had expected a magnificent State pageant, complained, was a matter of design, not merely omission.

The actual ceremony was far shorter than had been expected, in view of the number of signatures which were to be appended to the treaty and the two accompanying conventions, ending a bare forty-nine minutes after the hour set for the opening.

Premier Clemenceau called the session to order in the Hall of Mirrors at 3:10 P. M.

The signing began when Dr. Hermann Müller and Johannes Bell, the German signatories, affixed their names. Herr Müller signed at 3:13 o'clock and Herr Bell 3:13 o'clock.

The most dramatic moment connected with the signing came unexpectedly and spontaneously at the conclusion of the ceremony, when Premier Clemenceau, President Wilson and Premier Lloyd George descended from the Hall of Mirrors to the terrace at the rear of the palace, where thousands of spectators were massed.

GREAT DEMONSTRATION FOR ALLIED LEADERS.

With the appearance of the three who had dominated the councils of the Allies there began a most remarkable demonstration. With cries of "Vive Clemenceau!" "Vive Wilson!" "Vive Lloyd George!" dense crowds swept forward from all parts of the spacious terrace. In an instant the three were surrounded by struggling, cheering masses of people, fighting among themselves for a chance to get near the statesmen.

It had been planned that all the allied delegates would walk across the terrace after signing, to see the great fountains play, but none of the other plenipotentiaries got further than the door.

President Wilson, M. Clemenceau and Mr. Lloyd George were caught in the living stream which flowed across the great space, and became part of the crowd themselves. Soldiers and bodyguards struggled vainly to clear the way. The people jostled and struggled for a chance to touch the hands of the leaders of the Allies, all the while cheering madly.

Probably the least concerned for their personal safety were the three themselves. They went forward smilingly, as the crowd willed, bowing in response to the ovation, and here and there reaching out to shake an insistent hand as they passed on their way through the château grounds to watch the playing of the fountains—a part of the program which had been planned as a dignified State processional of all the plenipotentiaries.

Every available point of vantage in the palace and about the grounds was filled with thousands of people, who, less hardy than their comrades, had not been able to join the procession. No more picturesque setting could have been selected for this drama.

The return of President Wilson, M. Clemenceau, and Lloyd George toward the palace was a repetition of their outward journey of triumph. As they reached the château, however, they turned to the left instead of entering. The crowd was in doubt as to what was intended, but followed, cheering tumultuously.

Nearby a closed car was waiting and the three entered this and they drove from the grounds together amid a profusion of flowers which had been thrust through the open window.

All the diplomats and members of their parties who attended the ceremony of treaty signing wore conventional civilian clothes. Outside of this also there was a marked lack of gold lace and pageantry, with few of the fanciful uniforms of the Middle Ages, whose traditions and practices are so sternly condemned in the great, seal-covered document signed today.

One spot of color was made against the sombre background by the French Guards. A few selected members of the Guard were there, resplendent in red-plumed silver helmets and red, white and blue uniforms.

A group of allied Generals, including General Pershing, wore the scarlet sash of the Legion of Honor.

As a contrast with the Franco-German peace session of 1871, held in the same hall, there were present today grizzled French veterans of the Franco-Prussian war. They took the place of the Prussian guardsmen of the previous ceremony, and the Frenchmen today watched the ceremony with grim satisfaction.

The conditions of 1871 were exactly reversed. Today the disciples of Bismarck sat in the seats of the lowly, while the white marble statue of Minerva, Goddess of War, looked on. Overhead, on the frescoed ceiling, were scenes from France's ancient wars.

GERMAN PROTEST AT THE LAST MINUTE.

Three incidents were emphasized by the smoothness with which the ceremony was conducted. The first of these was the failure of the Chinese delegation to sign. The second was the protest submitted by General Jan Christian Smuts, who declared the peace unsatisfactory.

The third, which was unknown to the general public, came from the Germans. When the program for the ceremony was shown to the German delegation, Herr von Haimhausen of the German delegation went to Colonel Henri, French liaison officer, and protested. He said:

"We cannot admit that the German delegates should enter the hall by a different door than the Entente delegates; nor that military honors should be withheld. Had we known there would be such arrangements before, the delegates would not have come."

After a conference with the French Foreign Ministry it was decided, as a compromise, to render military honors as the Germans left. Otherwise the program as originally arranged was not changed.

Secretary Lansing was the first of the American delegation to arrive at the palace, entering the building at 1:45 o'clock.

The Peace Treaty was deposited on the table at 2:10 o'clock by William Martin of the French Foreign Office. It was inclosed in a stamped leather case.

Detachments of fifteen soldiers each from the American, British and French forces entered just before 3 o'clock and took their places in embrasures of the windows, overlooking the château park, a few feet from Marshal Foch, seated with the French delegation at the peace table.

The American soldiers who saw the signing of the treaty were all attached to President Wilson's residence. They were: George W. Bender, Baltimore; Stanley Cohek, Chicopee, Mass.; George Bridgewater, Palestine, Texas; Harlan Hayes, Green City, Wis.; J. S. Horton, Lexington, Miss.; William R. Knox, Temple, Okla.; Albert E. Landreth, Portsmouth, Va.; Sergeant Sam Lane, Prosper, Texas; George Laudance, Philadelphia; M. D. Mary, Havre, Mon.; Fred Quantz, Cleveland; Hubert Ridgeway, Mo.; Raymond Riley, Baltimore, and Frank Wilgus, Allentown, Penn.

With the thirty poilus and Tommies they were present as the real "artisans of peace" and stood within the enclosure reserved for plenipotentiaries and high officials of the conference as a visible sign of their rôle in bringing into being a new Europe.

Premier Clemenceau promptly stepped up to the French detachment and shook the hand of each man. The men had been selected from those who bore honorable wounds, and the Premier expressed his pleasure at seeing them there and his regret for the sufferings they had endured for their country.

Delegates of the minor powers made their way with difficulty through the crowd to their places at the table. Officers and civilians lined the walls and filled the aisles.

President Wilson entered the Hall of Mirrors at 2:50 o'clock. All the allied delegates were then seated except the Chinese, who did not attend.

The difficulty of seeing well from many parts of the hall militated against demonstrations on the arrival of the chief personages. Only a few persons saw President Wilson when he came in, and there was but a faint sound of applause for him.

An hour before the signing of the treaty those assembled in the hall had been urged to take their seats, but their eagerness to see the historic ceremony was so keen that they refused to remain seated, and crowded toward the centre of the hall, which is so long that a good view was impossible from a distance. Even with opera glasses, correspondents and others were unable to observe satisfactorily, as the seats were not elevated; consequently there was a general scramble for standing room.

German correspondents were ushered into the hall just before 3 o'clock and took standing room in a window at the rear of the correspondents' section.

When Premier Lloyd George arrived many delegates sought autographs from the members of the Council of Four, and they busied themselves for the next few minutes signing copies of the official program.

At 3 o'clock a hush fell over the hall, and the crowds shouted for the officials, who were standing, to sit down, so as not to block the view. The delegates showed some surprise at the disorder, which did not cease until all the spectators had seated themselves or found places against the walls.

MULLER AND BELL SHOW GREAT COMPOSURE.

At seven minutes past 3 Dr. Müller, German Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and Dr. Bell, Colonial Secretary, were shown into the hall, and quietly took their seats, the other delegates not rising.

They showed composure, and manifested none of the uneasiness which Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau, head of the German peace delegation, displayed when handed the treaty at Versailles.

Dr. Müller and Dr. Bell had driven early to Versailles by automobile from St. Cyr instead of taking the belt line railroad, as did the German delegates who came to receive the terms of peace on May 7. Their credentials had been approved in the morning.

M. Clemenceau, as President of the Conference, made this address:

"The session is open. The allied and associated powers on one side and the German reich on the other side have come to an agreement on the conditions of peace. The text has been completed, drafted, and the President of the Conference has stated in writing that the text that is about to be signed now is identical with the 200 copies that have been delivered to the German delegation.

"The signatures will be given now and they amount to a solemn undertaking faithfully and loyally to execute the conditions embodied by this treaty of peace. I now invite the delegates of the German reich to sign the treaty."

There was a tense pause for a moment. Then in response to M. Clemenceau's bidding the German delegates rose without a word and, escorted by William Martin, master of ceremonies, moved to the signatory table, where they placed upon the treaty the sign manuals which German Government leaders declared until recently would never be appended to this treaty.

They also signed a protocol covering changes in the document and the Polish undertaking.

It was too distant to see, even with glasses, the expression on the faces of the German plenipotentiaries during the ceremony, but observers among the officials say that the Germans fulfilled their rôles without apparent indications of emotions such as marked Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau's dramatic declarations at the first meeting.

President First Leader to Sign.

When they regained their seats after signing, President Wilson immediately arose and, followed by the other American plenipotentiaries, moved around the sides of the horseshoe to the signature tables.

President Wilson, and not M. Clemenceau, thus had the honor of signing as first of the leaders of the world alliance, but the honor was due to the alphabet, not other considerations, as the signatures occur in the same French alphabetical order as the enumeration of the allied and associated powers in the prologue of the treaty—the same order which determined the seating of the delegations at the plenary sessions of the integralliied conference.

Premier Lloyd George came next, after the American envoys, with the English delegation. The British dominions followed.

The representatives of the dominions signed in the following order: For Canada—Charles J. Doherty, Minister of Justice; Sir George Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce, and Arthur L. Sifton, Minister of Customs. For Australia—Premier William M. Hughes and Sir Gilbert Cook, Minister for the Navy. For New Zealand—W. F. Massey, Prime Minister and Minister of Labor. For the Union of South Africa—Premier Louis Botha and Jan Christian Smuts, Minister of Defense. For India—Edwin S. Montagu, Secretary for India, and the Maharaja of Bikanir.

Surprise Over Smuts's Protest.

A murmur of surprise passed around the hall when it became known that General Smuts, representing South Africa, signed under protest and filed a document declaring that the peace was unsatisfactory.

He held that the indemnities stipulated could not be accepted without grave injury to the industrial revival of Europe. He declared that it would be to the interests of the allied powers to render the stipulations more tolerable and moderate.

General Smuts asserted that there were territorial settlements which he believed would need revision, and that guarantees were provided which he hoped would soon be found out of harmony with the new peaceful temper and unarmed state of the Central Powers. Punishments were also foreshadowed, he said, over which a calmer mood might yet prefer to pass the sponge of oblivion.

M. Clemenceau, with the French delegates, were the next in line for the signing, then came Baron Saionji and the other Japanese delegates. The Italians came after the Japanese, and they, in turn, were followed by the representatives of the smaller powers.

During the attaching of the signatures of the great powers and the Germans a battery of moving picture machines and cameras clicked away so audibly that they could be heard above the general disorder.

At 3:45 the booming of cannon in celebration of the peace broke the monotony in the Hall of Mirrors, where the crowd had already tired of watching the signing.

China's failure to send her delegates to the ceremony created much comment. The vacant seats of the Chinese were noted early in the proceedings, but it was expected that the delegates would arrive later. Then the report was circulated officially that the Chinese would not sign without reservation on Shantung, and would issue a statement this evening on their position.

Some Confusion About Arrangements.

While the formal proceedings moved with system and complete adherence to program, the same cannot be said for other arrangements, which detracted markedly from the impressiveness of the event. So many spectators had, in one manner or another, gained access to the hall that the struggle for points of vantage at times approached the stage of a brawl, and the few officials intrusted with keeping order had the greatest difficulty in obtaining a semblance of it.

Cries of "Down in front!", which were probably never before heard at a gathering of similar importance, were addressed quite as often to officials of the Conference as to unofficial spectators. The stage for the ceremony was as crowded as the spectators' inclosures, giving a picture of crush and confusion. The plenipotentiaries and attachés, instead of arriving in delegations, formally introduced by ushers, as had been planned, drifted in individually as at the earlier sessions.

Among the American witnesses of the signing were Mrs. Wilson, accompanied by Miss Wilson and Mrs. Lansing, Mrs. House, Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Scott, and several other wives of delegates and officials; Herbert Hoover, Bernard M. Baruch, Vance McCormick, John W. Davis, Ambassador to Great Britain; Hugh C. Wallace, Ambassador to France; Henry Morgenthau, and about seventy of the more important attaches of the Peace Commission.

The close of the ceremony came so quickly and quietly that it was scarcely noticed until it was all over. M. Clemenceau arose almost unremarked, and in a voice almost lost amid the confusion and the hum of conversation, which had sprung up while the minor delegates were signing, declared the conference closed and asked the allied and associated delegates to remain in their places for a few minutes—this to permit the German plenipotentiaries to leave the hall and the building before the general exodus.

None arose as they filed out, accompanied by their suite of secretaries and interpreters, just as all the plenipotentiaries had kept their seats when Dr. Müller and Dr. Bell entered. This was regarded as an answer to the action of Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau in reading his speech seated at the first meeting, but even more as an expression of sentiment at the German attitude toward the acceptance of peace.

Germans White-Faced as They Left.

Beyond the demonstration for the allied leaders the main interest of the people about the palace was centred in the arrival and departure of the Germans. Few people witnessed the arrival of the Germans, but, despite the precautions of the soldiers, great crowds gathered about the rear of the palace when the envoys from Berlin left after signing the treaty.

There was no audible demonstration against the Germans, but there was a distinct current of hostility evident among the crowd which jammed close to the cars. The Germans were white-faced and quite apparently suffering strong emotion, but whether it was fear, anger, or chagrin one could only surmise.

The scene around the palace had been an animated one from an early hour. All day yesterday workmen and officials were busy in the château putting final touches on the arrangements, but the Hall of Mirrors was not yet ready. Much remained to be done at the last moment.

The peace table—a huge hollow rectangle with its open side facing the windows in the hall—was, however, in place. Its tawny yellow coverings blending with the rich browns, blues, and yellows of the antique hangings of the room and the rugs covering the dais. The mellow tints of the historical paintings in the arched recess of the long hall completed the picture.

Last minute changes were made today in the program to expedite the signing of the treaty. Two additional tables were placed beside the large one within the Hall of Mirrors. One of the new tables held the Rhine Convention and the other the protocol, containing changes in and interpretations of the treaty. The arrangement of the tables thus enabled three persons to be engaged simultaneously in affixing their signatures.

Most of the seventy-two plenipotentiaries had to write their names only twice, once on the treaty and once on the protocol. The convention covering the left bank of the Rhine and the treaties regarding the protection of minorities in Poland was signed only by delegates of the great powers.

Because of the size of the treaty and the fragile seals it bore, the plan to present it for signing to Premier Clemenceau, President Wilson, and Premier Lloyd George was given up.

A box of old fashioned goose quills, sharpened by the expert pen pointer of the French Foreign Office, was placed on each of the three tables for the use of plenipotentiaries who desired to observe the traditional formalities.

Tables for the secretaries were placed inside the table for the plenipotentiaries.

Chairs for the plenipotentiaries were drawn up around three sides of the table, which formed an open rectangle fully eighty feet long on its longer side. A chair for M. Clemenceau, President of the Peace Conference, was placed in the centre of the table facing the windows, with those for President Wilson and Premier Lloyd George on the right and left hand, respectively. The German delegates' seats were at the side of the table nearest the entrance which they could take after all the others had been seated.

This arrangement was made to permit the Germans to leave after the signature of the treaty before the allied delegations, not waiting for the procession of allied delegates to the terrace to witness the playing of the fountains.

Crowds Gathered Early.

People began to gather early in the neighborhood of the palace. As the morning wore on the crowds kept increasing in size, but the vast spaces around the château swallowed them up at first.

By noon eleven regiments of French cavalry and infantry under command of General Brecard had taken positions along the approaches to the palace, while within the court on either side solid lines of infantry in horizon blue were drawn up at attention.

Hours before the time set for the ceremony an endless stream of automobiles began moving out of Paris up the cannon-lined hill of the Champs Elysées, past the Arc de Triomphe, and out through the shady Bois de Boulogne, carrying plenipotentiaries, officials, and guests to the ceremony. The thoroughfare was kept clear by pickets, dragoons, and mounted gendarmes.

In the meantime thousands of Parisians were packing regular and special trains upon the lines leading to Versailles and contending with residents of the town itself for places in the park where the famous fountains would mark the end of the ceremony.

Long before the ceremony began a line of gendarmes was thrown across the approaches. While theoretically only persons bearing passes could get through this line, the crowds gradually filtered into and finally filled the square.

The automobiles, bearing delegates and secretaries, had reserved for their use the Avenue du Paris, the broad boulevard leading direct to the château's court of honor, French soldiers being ranged along the highway on both sides.

At the end of the court a guard of honor was drawn up to present arms as the leading plenipotentiaries passed, this guard comprising a company of Republican Guards in brilliant uniform. The entrance for the delegates was by the marble stairway to the "Queen's Apartments" and the Hall of Peace, giving access thence to the Hall of Mirrors.

This formality was not prescribed for the Germans, who had a separate route of entry, coming through the park and gaining the marble stairway through the ground floor.

How Our Delegates Signed.

VERSAILLES, June 28, (Official report transmitted from Hall of Mirrors to State Department.)—President Wilson and the American delegation completed signing the Peace Treaty at 3:14 o'clock, Paris time. The American delegation signed in this order: Secretary Lansing, Henry White, Colonel House, and General Bliss.

VERSAILLES, June 28.—There could have been found no nobler setting for the signing of peace than the palace of the greatest of French kings, on the hillcrest of Versailles. To reach it the plenipotentiaries and distinguished guests from all parts of the world, who motored to their places in the Hall of Mirrors, drove down the magnificent, tree-lined Avenue du Château, then across the huge square—the famous Place d'Armes of Versailles—and up through the gates and over the cobblestones of the Court of Honor to the entrance, where officers of the Garde Républicaine, in picturesque uniform, were drawn up to receive them.

It was a few minutes after 2 when the first automobile made its way between dense lines of cavalry backed by a double rank of infantry with bayonets fixed—there were said to be 20,000 soldiers altogether guarding the route—that held back the cheering crowds.

The scene from the Court of Honor where I was standing was impressive to a degree. The Place d'Armes was a lake of white faces, dappled everywhere by the bright colors of flags and fringed with the horizon blue of troops whose bayonets shone like flames as the sun peeped for a moment from behind heavy clouds. Above airplanes—a dozen or more—wheeled and curvetted.

The entrance to the palace courtyard is usually barred by great gilded gates. Today, in the words of the hymn, it was "flung open wide the golden gates and let the victors in." Up that triumphal passage, fully a quarter of a mile long, between the wings of the palace to the entrance to the Hall of Mirrors, representatives of the victorious nations passed in flag-decked limousines—hundreds, one after another, without intermission—for fifty minutes.

Midway down the courtyard is a big bronze statue of Louis XIV. on horseback, and all along its sides are statues of the Princes and Governors, Admirals and Generals, that made him Grande Monarque of France.

At the entrance, just inside the gates, General Bricker, commander of the Sixth Cavalry Division, was sitting on a splendid chestnut, hardly less immobile than the Great King, save when he flashed his sword up to salute a guest of especial distinction. And, as if to typify the whole scene, there were the inscriptions on the façade of the twin temple-like structures on either side of Louis XIV.'s statue: "To All the Glories of France." It was the supreme dedication of the palace to the greatest day that all its glorious history has known.

Torrent of Cheers for Foch.

One of the earliest to arrive was Marshal Foch, amid a torrent of cheering, which broke out even louder a few moments later when the massive head of Premier Clemenceau—for once with a smile on the Tiger's face—was seen through the windows of a French military car. To both, as to other chiefs, including Wilson, Pershing, and Lloyd George, the troops paid the honor of presenting arms all around the courtyard.

After Clemenceau they came thick and fast, diplomats, soldiers, Princes of India in gorgeous turbans, Japanese in immaculate Western dress, Admirals, flying men, Arabs, and a thousand and one picturesque uniforms of the French, British, and Colonial Armies.

Once amidst terrific enthusiasm a whole wagonload of doughboys, themselves yelling "their heads off," drove up the sacred slope of victory, but instead of proceeding right to the entrance swung around the Louis statue in the middle of the courtyard and went out by a side gateway, where the rest of the automobiles also went after depositing their passengers. Ten minutes later a damion laden with British Tommies arrived and got a cordial reception.

Whoever was responsible for it had a good thought, that the rank and file who had suffered and sweated most should share in the glorious finale, and it was every one's regret that a load or two of poilus had not equally participated.

It was 2:45 o'clock when Balfour, bowing and smiling, heralded the arrival of the British delegates. Lloyd George was just behind him, for once in the conventional high hat instead of his usual felt.

Warm Welcome for Wilson.

At ten minutes of 3 came President Wilson in a big black limousine, with his flag, a white eagle on a dark blue ground. The warmth of welcome accorded him bore witness to the place he still holds in French hearts and the people's appreciation of the stand he took in the past few weeks against altering the treaty in Germany's favor.

By 3 o'clock the last visitor had arrived, and the broad ribbon road stretched empty between the lines of troops from the gates of the palace courtyard. The Germans had already taken their places—to avoid a possible unpleasant incident they had been conveyed from the Hôtel des Reservoirs Annex through the park.

It is impossible to tell what the day meant to the people of Versailles. To them, even more than to the rest of France, it was the wiping out of the ancient stain whose shame they had felt more deeply than any other. At the entrance of the crowded dining hall of the Hôtel des Reservoirs the old aunt of the proprietor stood with swimming eyes.

"I saw them dine here," she said, "on the night before the other treaty. And now this—thank God I have lived for it!"

At the side entrance to the courtyard there was a pathetic incident. An old woman, supported by two sons, one in the uniform of a Major of Chasseurs, the other in civilian clothes, but with an armless sleeve and the Legion of Honor and War Cross ribbons in his buttonhole, came up to the stern guardians and begged admittance, although without a ticket.

"Just let me inside the courtyard," she pleaded. "When the Germans were here a General was quartered in my house. I shared the defeat; let me share the victory."

The orders were strict and absolute, but for her they made an exception.

THREE TENSE MINUTES AS GERMANS SIGNED

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

VERSAILLES, June 28.—The stillest three minutes ever lived through were those in which the German delegates signed the Peace Treaty today. Contrary to expectation, the Germans signed first, after a brief speech by Premier Clemenceau, in which he said the treaty provisions must be faithfully and loyally adhered to. The Germans had been ushered into the Hall of Mirrors, where all the other delegations, with the exception of the Chinese, awaited them.

The Chinese were not present to sign because they were not allowed to make reservations in reference to Shantung. Despite the French opposition to protests or reservations of any kind, however, General Smuts issued a long protest immediately on giving his signature for South Africa.

To return to the utter silence of those first three minutes, in the audience outside the space reserved for delegates there was just the beginning of a murmur when the Germans appeared, but it was quickly hushed and spontaneously.

It recalled another historic incident at the battle of Santiago when Captain Philip of the American Navy restrained his men. This time it would be, "Don't cheer, boys. They're signing."

The American delegates, led by President Wilson, signed next to the Germans. Then followed the British and the long procession of other delegates.

President Thanks France for Her Hospitality

As I look back over the eventful months I have spent in France, my memory is not of conferences and hard work alone, but also of innumerable acts of generosity and friendship which have made me feel how genuine the sentiments of France are toward the people of America and how fortunate I have been to be the representative of our people in the midst of a nation which knows how to show us kindness with so much charm and so much open manifestation of what is in its heart.

Deeply happy as I am at the prospect of joining my own countrymen again, I leave France with genuine regret, my deep sympathy for her people and belief in her future confirmed, my thought enlarged by the privilege of association with her public men, conscious of more than one affectionate friendship formed, and profoundly grateful for unstinted hospitality and for countless kindnesses which have made me feel welcome and at home.

I take the liberty of bidding France godspeed as well as goodbye, and of expressing once more my abiding interest and entire confidence in her future.

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.

GUNS TELL LONDON PEACE IS SIGNED

THRONG BEFORE THE PALACE

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 28.—The official seal was set on the report of the signing of peace by the booming of guns. The West End was filled with joyous crowds, but the rejoicings fell far below those witnessed on armistice day.

The announcement of the signing was made from stages of theatres and music halls at the matinée performances, and the audiences sang "Rule, Britannia!" and "God Save the King." Nearly all the hotels and restaurants are giving peace dinners tonight, which are generally followed by dances. The prices range from three guineas per head downward, with wines extra.

Flags were not generally displayed until the news actually came, but they were everywhere in readiness, and street hawkers did a thriving business as the evening advanced. There was a fair show of bunting in parts of the Strand at an early hour, but Pall Mall remained unadorned, and there was not a flag to be seen in Piccadilly Circus in the early part of the afternoon. The Royal Academy made a brave show with flags, serving a double purpose as they advertised the war loan. Bond Street, too, mustered up courage to show a few pieces of color, but Clubland in Piccadilly, opposite the Green Park, gave no sign of its intentions until after 6 o'clock.

Trafalgar Square and its neighborhood were unusually crowded, but this was due to the desire to watch the Victory Loan procession, organized by women, rather than to the spirit of celebration.

Loyalty's Share in the Demonstration.

As the guns began firing, giving a strangely familiar imitation of an air raid defense, the King and Queen, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and Princess Mary, appeared on the balcony at Buckingham Palace. A crowd 10,000 strong had gathered there some time before, and as the cheers went up there was a rush from all parts of the nearby parks to reinforce it. For three-quarters of an hour the royal family stood in presence of the people, and the scene had that simple homely English touch which marked the armistice celebrations.

The crowd was composed of people of all ages and sailings. The band, hastily got together from Guards regiments at Wellington Barracks, interspersed national airs with hymns and popular songs, and the King made a brief speech of thanks and congratulations. "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "The Marseillaise" were two of the national anthems played, besides the British, and, as the band broke into "Tipperary," there were smiles which turned into something suspiciously like tears.

'Twas good to know—that the long, long way" was discovered at last, but the air brought back too many memories of it to be sung very heartily.

The Prince was honored with his own anthem, "God Bless the Prince of Wales," and then the Queen turned to Princess Mary, who was standing in the background, and made her take her place between the King and herself. The Princess was greeted with a great burst of cheers as she bowed to the crowd.

Two verses of "O God, Our Help," were sung by all, standing, with bared heads, and then the King, noticing that his orderlies, a sergeant and a private, were standing where they could see nothing, called them out to a place on the balcony to get a view of the wonderful scene below. "Rule, Britannia," and "Land of Hope and Glory" were sung with great enthusiasm, and "Keep the Home Fires Burning," and the old favorite, "Lads of the Old Brigade," were two of the popular airs played. Then, with a salute from the King and three deep courtesies from the Queen, the demonstration came to an end.

The news agencies and newspapers have circulated a number of messages from various personalities on the conclusion of peace. The predominating note is that, while the victory may not be all it might have been, it is still something to be deeply thankful for. The announcement that the blockade will not be raised till the German National Assembly has ratified the treaty accords to some extent with the apprehensions that yet exist.

"I rejoice in the peace, but know nothing of the vital point, which is: What are the guarantees of its execution?" says Lord Rosebery in a telegram to The Evening Standard.

On the whole, however, the country is looking forward with hope to the settlement of the problems which are the aftermath of the war. A highly placed authority told THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent that the labor outlook was already improving, and that, although the extremists carried the day at the Southport conference in regard to direct action, the vote was likely to remain an empty victory.

Bells Peal in Celebration.

LONDON, June 28, (Associated Press.)—London learned of the signing of the Peace Treaty at Versailles at 3:40 P. M. The news became known through the firing of guns which had been installed during the war to warn the city of air raids.

The moving throngs came to a halt when the first report was heard. The tension lasted but a few seconds. Then the people gave themselves up to celebration of the event. Flag sellers did a brisk trade. Their wares were bought eagerly and were thrown to the breeze by the cheering thousands.

The great bells of St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey and virtually all the churches of the metropolis added to the din. Bands of Boy Scouts, engaged in their usual afternoon marching, put even more than customary vigor into the blowing of bugles and the beating of drums.

Trafalgar Square, already crowded by those attending a huge war bond sale, was a magnet that drew many other thousands. The crowds poured into the square, cheering as they came. Whitehall and other centres, including Hyde Park, also had their demonstrations. Thousands of Boy Scouts, drawn by the blowing of many whistles, gathered to celebrate in Hyde Park. In fact, the whole west end suburban district participated in the celebration. The only quiet spot was the square mile which composes the City of London proper, which is always deserted Saturday afternoons. Even there flags were soon flying.

Tonight, a great circle of searchlights is playing streams of light over the city.

EXPECT HELP TO AUSTRIA.

Vienna Hears Financial Terms of Treaty Are to be Modified.

Special to The New York Times.

VIENNA, June 28, (via Geneva.)—According to authoritative French circles, material amelioration of the financial terms in the Austrian treaty is intended by the allied powers, especially an equitable adjustment of the war debts among all the seceding States, in order to prevent Austria from becoming bankrupt.

The Entente's favorable view, it is said, is fortified by the conviction that no further Bolshevist danger is to be apprehended here. The French have determined to assist in the rebuilding of Austria, provided she does not join Germany.

WILSON'S MESSAGE CHEERED IN HOUSE

Republicans Join in Applause Until League of Nations Is Discussed.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—President Wilson's message to the American people announcing that the Peace Treaty had been signed in Paris was read in the House today, where it was received with applause.

While the announcement that peace had been signed brought the House to its feet cheering and shouting, the applause soon subsided on the Republican side as the clerk proceeded to read the message wherein Mr. Wilson told of the League of Nations. There was a wild cheering when the clerk read the first sentence, "The treaty has been signed," with the Democrats shouting vociferously, and the Republicans merely showing dignified approval by the clapping of hands.

There was not a single sign of approval on the Republican side over the reference to the League of Nations until the Democrats had stirred them to action by prolonged applause. Then a few Republicans clapped their hands. As the clerk finished reading the message the House with one accord arose and cheered and yelled.

Because of the attitude of the Senate Republicans on the peace treaty, Republican members of the House were reluctant to comment upon the treaty except to say that they were glad that the Peace Conference had successfully ended its work. Democrats, on the other hand, expressed themselves as entirely satisfied with the feature of the treaty and certain ratifications of the treaty without amendment.

Speaker Gillett, in discussing the signing of the treaty, expressed the view held by most Republicans. He said:

"I am, of course, exceedingly glad that the Peace Treaty, for which we have been patiently waiting for more than seven months, has at last been consummated. I am also exceedingly glad that the President will at last feel that he can come home and give his belated signature to the important and necessary legislation which Congress has enacted.

"I hope the peace treaty may be a permanent and enduring one, but it seems to me no thoughtful man can be without misgivings. Aside from the much disputed League of Nations, it is very problematical what will happen to the many new nations and boundaries which this far-reaching treaty has called into being, republics lacking in the tradition and experience of self-government and invested by complications and animosities, both from within and without.

"I could have wished that the United States, which has had no historic knowledge or association with these peoples, might have refrained from active participation in the settlement of their destiny and left it to their European neighbors who are most familiar with and most interested in their national life and who must be their future guardians. But I hope that the treaty, although it is a palpable compromise between justice and self-interest, may prove as beneficent and successful as to be a bulwark against future wars and that business and industry the world over will revive."

Most of the other Republican members approached declined to comment upon the matter except to say that they were glad that the treaty had been signed and the President would return to the United States. Some Republicans, among them Republican Leader Mondell, and Representative Julius Kahn, were very much exercised over the report that the President had used his private seal when attaching his signature to the treaty.

"If it is necessary that the signatures attached to the Peace Treaty be accompanied by a seal, then it is certain that the President of the United States has authority to use any seal except the seal of the country," said Mr. Mondell. "A personal ring can certainly have no significance unless it be that the President, after the manner of autocratic rulers in days past, is trying to emphasize the fact that he himself, Woodrow Wilson, is signing the treaty."

"I wish that the President could have seen his way clear to have affixed the seal of his country on the treaty, rather than his personal seal," said Representative Julius Kahn.

Representative Martin B. Madden, Republican, Illinois, said:

"I am highly gratified that the Peace Treaty has been signed and I hope that it will result in peace. I am very strongly in favor of its ratification promptly by the Senate, with the elimination of Article 10 and the mandatory features. The American people are opposed to being responsible for the maintenance of the political and territorial integrity of the countries of Europe, as provided in Article 10."

Representative George P. Darrow, Republican, Pennsylvania, said:

"Now that the treaty has been signed the American public will expect the Senate to act promptly upon the treaty, so that the country can return to a peace basis. I hope that there is no needless delay in the Senate."

Representative Houghton, Republican, New York: "I am thankful, like other good Americans, that a peace treaty has been signed. I only regret that peace could not have been made six months ago and that the League of Nations could not have come subsequent to actual peace, without partisanship, passion, or prejudice."

Ex-Speaker Clark, Democrat, Missouri: "Every American, and most people on earth, rejoice."

NO BLOCKADE LIFTING BEFORE RATIFICATION

VERSAILLES, June 28, (Havas.)—The allied note to the German delegation dealing with ratification of the treaty by Germany was delivered late this afternoon.

It is pointed out in the note, among other things, that withdrawal of the blockade of Germany depended on ratification of the treaty.

Dr. Hermann Müller and Dr. Bell and about fifty members of the German mission left Versailles at 8:20 o'clock this evening, going to the Noisy-Le-Roi Station. There they will board a train on their return trip to Germany.

Forty German secretaries will remain in Versailles to conclude the affairs of the German delegation.

PARIS, June 28, (Associated Press.)—In the treaty signed at Versailles, the newspapers say, were certain stipulations which, it was hoped, would hasten ratification of the treaty by the German National Assembly.

The Journal says that the Allies, following the German example of 1871, stipulated that the liberation of German prisoners would be dependent upon ratification of the treaty by the German Assembly and that if the Germans approved the treaty at once, the prisoners would be released without delay.

ENJOINS WATCHFULNESS.

Paris Temps Sees Need of Keeping Eyes on the Germans.

PARIS, June 27.—In an editorial reviewing the addresses of Presidents Poincaré and Wilson at last night's dinner Le Temps alludes to the former's remarks concerning the necessity of watchfulness to insure the execution of the terms of peace by Germany, and remarks:

"A central government of the world has had its seat in Paris for the last five months. It commanded all the victorious armies and fleets. It held at its mercy 100,000,000 conquered enemies, and had at its disposition economic resources that are necessary for the existence of all peoples, even neutrals. Wherever it did not make itself obeyed, as in Russia or Hungary, it was because it did not make use of its power."

The newspaper dwells on the sentiments expressed by both Presidents—that the union formed to win the war must continue in order that peace might be made durable—and adds:

"President Wilson's method rests entirely on Article X. of the League of Nations. That is the doctrine he is going to defend in America. We firmly hope he will triumph, and, in following with our eyes the wake of his ship, we will work to the end that it shall triumph here."

CHINESE EXPLAIN REFUSAL TO SIGN

Wanted to Write Reservation in the Treaty Above Their Signatures.

ASSERT DENIAL OF JUSTICE

Allies Were Willing to Let Them Make a Declaration After Signing.

PARIS, June 28, (Associated Press.)—The refusal of China to sign the Peace Treaty came after repeated efforts of the Chinese delegation to obtain permission to sign with reservation on the Shantung settlement.

President Wilson was appealed to by the Chinese delegation several times within the last week, and at first seemed inclined to favor allowing the Chinese to attach their signatures with reservations. Finally, he concurred in the decision of the conference that the Chinese might make a declaration of their position after signature, but not before.

This was regarded by the delegation as incapable of protecting China's rights. The Chinese refused to sign and are now awaiting further orders from Peking.

The Chinese delegation issued an official statement on its position tonight, reviewing its protest against the Shantung settlement, made to the Council of Prime Ministers on May 4, and its reservation on the question, made in the plenary session of the Peace Conference May 6, against the transfer of German rights in Shantung to Japan instead of to China.

The statement says that the action of the conference on Shantung evoked a nation-wide protest in China, which makes it impossible for the Chinese Government to accept the objectionable clause in the treaty.

The delegation's proposal was that it should write in the treaty above its signature, "Subject to reservation made at the plenary session of May 6, relative to the question of Shantung in Articles 156, 157, and 158." The statement says that the Peace Conference, through official channels, denied the privilege of any action on the part of China which would make it possible to reopen the Shantung question.

"After failing in all earnest attempts at conciliation," says the statement, "and after seeing every honorable compromise rejected, the Chinese delegation had no course open save to adhere to the path of duty to their country.

"Rather than accept by their signatures the Shantung articles in the treaty against which their sense of right and justice militates, they refrained from signing the treaty altogether. The Chinese plenipotentiaries regret having to take a course which appears to mar the solidarity of the allied and associated powers, but they are firmly of the opinion, however, that responsibility for this rests not with themselves, who had no other honorable course, but rather with those who, it is felt, unjustly and unnecessarily deprived them of the right of making a declaration to safeguard against any interpretation which might prejudice China, from asking for reconsideration of the Shantung question at a suitable moment in the future, in the hope that the injustice to China might be rectified later in the interest of permanent peace in the Far East.

had to seek an asylum in the Netherlands:"

The officers remind the queen that her blood is the same as William's, since the houses of Orange and Hohenzollern are closely related.

Referring to Field Marshal von Hindenburg's retirement, the "Correspondence of the National Volksgerd" publishes remarks that are anything but flattering to the Field Marshal, and doubts that Hindenburg is really a great General, because, it says, a military genius who does not also possess great statesmanlike qualities is impossible, and in such Hindenburg is sadly deficient.

"He was the only man who might have saved the monarchy," the article continues, "but only talked of doing his duty. To whom? To the lot of perjured upstarts to whom the revolution had given power?"

Another paragraph reads:

"Fritz Ebert, once a saloon keeper in Bremen, grievously and deeply moved, dismisses a man like Hindenburg. That is moral chaos which is bound to be followed by military, political, and economic chaos. Hindenburg sacrificed the Kaiser to the revolution. Now the revolution sacrifices Hindenburg to the Entente."

Ex-Kaiser Relies on Holland.

AMERONGEN, June 23.—(Associated Press.)—Former Emperor William and his advisers are apparently fully confident that the Netherlands Government will be unable to consent to the Entente's forthcoming demand for his extradition, which his suite regards as illegal under existing international law.

Several members of the entourage are away from Amerongen, being busily engaged in inspecting houses with a view to the purchase of Count Hohenzollern's future residence, and indications point to his removal within a short period from his present place of exile.

The former monarch was outwardly quite calm today after the first shock of hearing that Germany had decided to sign the treaty without reservations. His wife, however, was more affected, and appeared to be deeply saddened by the prospect that it will be impossible for her ever to return to Germany. She remained within the castle when her husband went, with Dr. Foerster, to resume his morning log-sawing, and was not seen about the garden during the afternoon.

As far as can be learned, the choice of a future home for Count Hohenzollern lies between two castles, one in the vicinity of Doorn and the other near Arnhem.

VIOLENCE GROWS IN BERLIN FERMENT

has occurred twice within the last week in the wealthiest parts of the town. A well-known actress, who wore a fortune in diamonds, jumped from one of the cars and escaped with bruises.

Men disguised as officers drive in broad daylight to jewelry stores and other shops in the wealthy districts like Wilmersdorf, Charlottenburg, and Schoeneberg, and steal goods worth hundreds of thousands of marks without any interference by the police or soldiers.

Lately mysterious agents have been visiting wealthy suburban house owners and shopkeepers, guaranteeing that for the payment of a certain sum no attempt on their property will be made by the Spartacides, who will also see that nobody else molests them. Nobody knows exactly how the scheme works but it is certain these secret agents have kept their word in every case, as none has suffered who paid them.

In consequence, gamblers' clubs and night amusement resorts are availing themselves of this extraordinary insurance scheme now.

So-called hunger riots were more numerous than ever yesterday, especially in the poorer suburbs. In most cases the people were contented to clean out shops where usurious prices were charged.

To increase the Government's trouble to an intolerable degree, the railway strike, despite Noske's drastic threats, is assuming dimensions seriously menacing the already very limited food supply of Berlin. Noske's strike prohibition is being laughed at, and the despair of the Ministers, who declare that the demands of the railway men will bankrupt the railway department, only cause the employes to shrug their shoulders. Up to 5 o'clock this afternoon all efforts at conciliation had been fruitless.

The central council of all German workers' councils, which is principally composed of Independents and Communists, threatens to declare a general strike in Berlin and eventually all Germany unless an agreement is reached by the Berlin Government and the railway employes by tomorrow afternoon.

Meanwhile Noske has made some of his threats good by arresting a number of strike leaders. It seems to be a toss-up whether this measure will precipitate further acts of a more or less revolutionary character or inspire wholesome awe for the law.

STRIKERS DEFY NOSKE ORDER.

Berlin Traffic Tied Up—Order Restored at Hamburg.

BERLIN, June 28, (Associated Press.)—The striking railway men in the Berlin district, some 20,000 shop and yard workers, have decided to continue on strike in spite of the demand of their union that they resume work, and in spite of an order by Gustav Noske, Minister of Defense, that they go back to work not later than today.

The men are striking on the suburban and belt lines, and traffic is virtually at a standstill. Long distance service to the East and Northeast is intermittent.

Despite the admonition of the officers of the Foderation of Railway Workers and Herr Noske's order, it is feared that the strike is beyond control of the authorities as a result of communistic activities.

It is officially announced that Government troops are in complete control at Hamburg. No fighting is reported in that city, and it is said that sufficient troops are arriving to insure a restoration of normal conditions.

The Prussian Government, having received a vote of confidence in the Diet, has decided to remain in office.

RESENT BAR ON GERMAN PRESS

Demand in Berlin for Freedom to Send Correspondents Abroad.

BERLIN, June 27.—(Associated Press.)—The Berliner Zeitung says that the condition which permits correspondents of hostile countries to work unmolested in Germany, while German journalists are barred from those countries, is intolerable and must not continue longer than the date of the signing of peace.

The newspaper calls on the Government to demand that German correspondents be permitted to go abroad as soon as the treaty signatures are affixed. It says that if any country refuses the privilege its own journalistic representatives should be barred from Germany until peace becomes effective.

The Zeitung charges that slighting of the German press since the armistice in favor of foreign correspondents has been a heavy blow to German prestige abroad.

PLAN RECEPTION HERE WHEN WILSON ARRIVES

WASHINGTON, June 28.—President Wilson and his party will leave Paris at 9:30 tonight for Brest, to sail for home, Secretary Tumulty was notified today. The cable from President Wilson said "all well."

President Wilson has consented to an unofficial reception for him on his arrival in New York. A committee of citizens, through Secretary Tumulty, had asked that they be allowed to prepare an unofficial greeting. This is the first intimation of where the President would land.

President Wilson will be accorded a rousing reception when the George Washington, on which he will sail from Brest today, is sighted off Sandy Hook. Mayor Hylan will lead a delegation of prominent men in welcoming the chief magistrate of the nation on his return from the Peace Conference.

Among those who are expected to go down the bay on the steamer Petrol, which will leave from Pier A, are Elbert H. Gary, Rodman Wanamaker, Grover A. Whalen, Charles M. Schwab, ex-Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo, Dr. Royal S. Copeland, City Chamberlain Alfred Johnson, Borough President Frank L. Dowling, Public Service Commissioner Lewis Nixon, Deputy Public Service Commissioner Daniel J. Ryan, and Peter J. Brady, supervisor of the City Record.

The Municipal Band will play and the Police Glee Club, led by Patrolman Patrick Fitzgibbons, will sing.

LABOR READY TO HELP GERMANY IF WORTHY

PHILADELPHIA, June 28.—"The American Federation of Labor is ready to extend the helping hand to Germany if the Germans show themselves worthy," said Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, in addressing today members of the organization at the launching of the cargo carrier Afel at the Hog Island Shipyard. Mr. Gompers uttered his significant words on the eve of his return to Europe to continue the work of building up the shattered forces of labor on the Continent. The fact that Mr. Gompers was soon to return to France was told by Mathew C. Brush, President of the American International Shipbuilding Company.

"To me this is an epoch-making event," said Mr. Gompers, "not only because of the purpose for which we are assembled—the launching of the Afel—but also because of the signing of the Peace Treaty. At last the dawn of a new era has come, that for which you men labored in this the greatest of shipyards and performed such marvelous tasks in helping your Government and those of its allies.

"We found Germany, Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey not from our desire to fight but to rid their peoples of oppression from their masters and to give them an opportunity for self-expression. If our former enemies will but show themselves worthy, we will gladly extend to them the hand of fraternity.

"Remember that the ideals of the American Federation of Labor are synonymous with those of the Government."

The ship was named as a tribute to the 100 per cent. Americanism displayed by the organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor during the war." Sarah A. Conboy of New York, International Secretary-Treasurer of the United Textile Workers of America, was the sponsor.

CONTRASTS SIGNING WITH 1870 CEREMONY

BISMARCK DOMINATED ALL

Black Coats of Allied Leaders Lack the Arrogance of the Prussian Uniforms and Standards.

By MAJOR GEN. SIR FREDERICK MAURICE.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 28.—Most of us are familiar with the picture of the ceremony of the proclamation of the German Emperor in the Hall of Mirrors at Versailles in December, 1870. The central figure is justly enough not old King William, the newly become Emperor, but the big, burly person of Bismarck, who, dressed in his white Cuirassier uniform, with polished steel helmet on his head, clanking sabre at his side, legs in great jack boots reaching half way up the thighs, stands forward on the front of the dais and reads the document, which announces to the world that the King of Prussia has taken to himself the title of German Emperor. That was a great moment in Bismarck's life, for it marked with pomp and circumstance the triumph of his policy of blood and iron and the unity of Germany, which had been the goal of that policy. He had planned three wars to bring that unity about, and now in the third the hereditary enemy had been crushed, the mutual jealousies of the German States had disappeared in pride in the common victory, and the supremacy of Prussia had been established beyond question.

There had been anxieties up to the last moment. The old King was none too eager to exchange his hereditary crown for another diadem, which if more resplendent might, as one of the assistants at the ceremony, von Blumenthal, shrewdly remarks in his diary, prove to be a crown of thorns. Bavaria, Prussia's chief rival, had not given way with the best of grace and on the very eve of the ceremony had insisted the title of Emperor of Germany, which had been proposed, should be changed to that of German Emperor, in order that all might know that the new chief was the head of an association of States, and that Bavaria retained her independence within her frontiers. This had aroused strong opposition in Prussia, but in the end Bismarck got his way, as he usually did, by the adroit use of threats and concessions.

Nor were all the anxieties political. The date for the ceremony had been fixed because it was the 170th anniversary of the day on which the elector of Brandenburg had declared himself to be King of Prussia, but the French were not likely to be reasonable enough to respect such an anniversary, and Moltke and his staff were anxious lest the celebration should be disturbed by a French attack.

It is strange for us, who have read of the bombardment of Paris from a distance of 70 miles, to think of this assemblage of princes and powers in the Palace of Versailles taking place within 7,000 yards of the German front line trenches at St. Cloud, and within 9,000 yards of the guns of Mont Valerien which contained the heaviest artillery then possessed by the French. Moltke had got wind of French preparations for a sortie, which in point of fact took place the very next day. The French in the sortie won a footing on Garche Ridge, to which the faithful guide now takes the tourist for a view over Paris on account of the Bois de Boulogne. There was alarm in Versailles, where the day before there had been rejoicing, and we find Bismarck's Boswell, Moritz Busch, speaking of the French being within two miles and of talk in the new Emperor's entourage of "packing up," but the day of the ceremony passed off peacefully enough, and as was fitting for the celebration of the harvest of the policy of blood and iron as it was of military display.

The colors and standards of the German regiments besieging Paris gave to the scene a background of gold and silk, reproduced almost to the infinite as the reflection in one mirror was repeated in another across the hall. In front of the colors were grouped on the dais the princes of the German States, headed by the handsome figure of the Crown Prince Frederick. In the centre stood the old King, and on the floor in front of him Bismarck, Moltke, and Roon, the triumvirate who had brought to pass the event which was being consummated. Flanking the dais on either side were two gigantic troopers, living monuments of the Prussian ideal. The body of the great hall was crowded with a mass of officers representing the armies of the German States, henceforth to be united in the German Army.

Bismarck gave Germany to drink the brew which he had concocted, and left the hall a proud and satisfied man, little dreaming how his draught would go to the heads of his Prussians, and by making them drunk with power and lust would bring them back to the Hall of Mirrors in beggary and shame.

Today's ceremony was very different. There were more black coats than uniforms, few ribbons and stars, and no gigantic troopers.

The artist who is to paint the picture, for we may assume the scene will be recorded on canvas for us, will not have as easy a task as had his German rival. Mr. Lloyd George, President Wilson, and M. Clemenceau will not cut the figure of Bismarck in his jack boots, though Foch, in his sky blue, may be able to challenge comparison with Moltke. Yet if the picture does not strike the eye, it will be well worth having, particularly if we can place it beside a copy of that other picture which hangs, or used to hang, in the arsenal at Berlin. The hair may then inspire a new Johnson to write for us a new "Vanity of Human Wishes."

YEARS OF WORLD CONVULSION.

Main Events That Shaped the Outline of the War Now Ended.

With the signing of the treaty of peace yesterday the war with Germany was technically ended. It also ended the armistice which closed hostilities on Nov. 11, 1918.

There remain to be dealt with Austria, with whom an armistice was signed Nov. 4, 1918, and whose delegates received the text of the treaty she is expected to sign on June 8, and Bulgaria and Turkey, which surrendered, respectively, on Sept. 30 and Oct. 30, 1918.

Five years ago yesterday the murder of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand at Serajevo caused the Austro-Hungarian Government to blame Serbia for the crime and to issue to that Government an ultimatum on July 23, 1914, the unsatisfactory reply to which caused Austria-Hungary to declare war on Serbia four days later.

Meanwhile, on July 5, the German Kaiser had held a conference of military, financial, and political leaders, at Potsdam, where, from accounts of that meeting which have transpired several things were decided upon—Germany would support Austria-Hungary, if Russia attempted to defend Serbia against Austria-Hungary; it was conceded that France would line up with Russia, in which case the former would be attacked through Belgium; it was conceded that Great Britain might decide that the Serbian affair was a European question and not a local one; in which case, diplomacy must temporize to keep Great Britain neutral until France had been crushed and Russia vitally invaded; a sympathetic neutrality was expected from Italy—nothing more.

The decisions at Potsdam were not realized beyond what was prepared for in regard to Russia and France, on whom Germany declared war, respectively, on Aug. 1 and 3. Great Britain declared war on Germany on Aug. 4 for her violation of Belgium.

Thus the great European war was begun which was to bring into active conflict four nations on one side and twelve on the other, not to mention on the latter side the three nations produced by the war—Czechoslovakia, Poland, and Hedjas—or twelve other nations which also declared war on Germany but did not actively participate in it.

Up to the time of the armistice the Central Powers, having mobilized 23,500,000 men, had suffered 12,542,217 casualties, while the Allies, with 39,976,884 men mobilized, had a casualty list of 25,982,226. The military dead were respectively 2,912,328 and 4,909,476. The civilian dead, principally Armenian, Greek, Belgian and French, were estimated at 2,185,322. The expenditures of eight of the foremost powers amounted to $187,600,000,000.

From August, 1914, until the second week of November, 1918, the war shaped itself particularly influenced by the following events:

1914-15.—The isolation of the German fleet; Battle of the Marne (Sept. 6;) German atrocities in Belgium; German naval defeat off Falkland Islands (Dec. 8;) Turkish defeat at Suez Canal (Feb. 3;) Allies land at Gallipoli (April 25;) sinking of the Lusitania (May 7;) Teutonic drive through Poland and Galicia (April-August;) Italy's declaration of war against Austria (May 23;) German propaganda here to prevent export of munitions to Allies.

1915-16.—Teutonic drive through Balkans (Aug.-Dec.;) battle of Loos, (Sept. 25;) murder of Nurse Cavell, (Oct. 13;) evacuation of Gallipoli, (Jan. 8;) Verdun defense, (Feb. 21;) surrender of Kut, (April 29;) defeat of German fleet off Jutland, (May 31;) battle of the Somme, (June-August;) Brusiloff's campaign, (July-August.)

1916-17.—Battle of the Isonzo, (Aug. 6-20;) fall of Bucharest, (Dec. 6;) unrestricted U-boat campaign, (Feb. 1;) fall of Bagdad, (March 11;) first Russian revolution, (March 12;) United States declared war, (April 6;) battle of Arras, (April 9;) President Wilson's letters, messages, and speeches.

1917-18.—Italian disaster at Caporetto, (Oct. 24;) Bolshevist revolution, (Nov. 7;) Fall of Jerusalem to Allenby, (Dec. 9;) Treaty of Brest-Litovsk, (March 3;) German offensive begun, (March 21;) Foch in supreme command of Allies in west, (March 28;) First of Foch counterstrokes, (July 18.)—American drive in the Argonne, (Sept. 26;) Battle of the Piave, and great Italian advance begun, (Oct. 24.)

The rapid military advances successively drove Bulgaria, Turkey, Austria-Hungary, and finally Germany, out of the war, and on Jan. 18, 1919, the Peace Conference which settled with Germany yesterday was convened at Paris.

PARLIAMENTS GET TREATY ON TUESDAY

Clemenceau to Present It to Deputies and Lloyd George to Commons.

PARIS, June 28.—The text of the Peace Treaty will be presented to the Chamber of Deputies Tuesday by Premier Clemenceau, says the Echo de Paris. Former Premier Viviani is said to have been intrusted with drawing up the general report on the treaty.

Premier Lloyd George, the paper adds, will address the British House of Commons Tuesday on the peace negotiations.

The Chamber of Deputies yesterday elected fifty-eight members of the committee charged with the examination of the peace treaty. The selections of various political groups were approved, with the exception of those of the Socialists. Jean Longuet and M. Mayeras, Extreme Socialists, failed to receive a majority, necessitating another election for the two remaining members of the committee. The Socialists announce that they will retire from the committee altogether unless these two candidates are elected.

SIGNED WITH FOUNTAIN PEN,

Lloyd George Introduced an Innovation at Paris.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 28.—According to R. B. Morris, M. P., Premier Lloyd George, who returns to London tomorrow, signed the Peace Treaty with a fountain pen. This is said to be the first time in history that such a pen has been used for the signature of a treaty. Mr. Morris thus tells the story:

"I desired some time ago to give the Prime Minister a little souvenir, and, seeing that he writes such a lot, I thought it would not be a bad idea to give him a fountain pen. The holder is heavily gold mounted and adorned with the Welsh words, 'Nodo Llg, 1918.' It also is inscribed with the Prime Minister's signature in fac-simile.

"When it was taken down to Downing Street, the Prime Minister at once commenced to write with it, and he has done all his writing with it ever since. Recently, when another was offered to him, he replied, 'I have one of my own, with which I am going to sign the Peace Treaty.'" devastated Europe and distracted the world. It manifests the victory of ideals of freedom, and of liberty for which we have made untold sacrifices.

I share my people's joy and thanksgiving, and earnestly pray that coming years of peace may bring to them every increasing happiness and prosperity."

GEORGE, R. I.

The King has requested his representatives to convey messages of congratulation to the Governments of Uruguay, Peru, Panama, Bolivia, Ecuador, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Honduras, Cuba, Haiti, and Liberia.

Stretched, as in the tire, good tubes do not rip, when cut. They cut but do not rip. Make your dealer prove that the tube he sells will stand the Norwalk test.

The slightest cut in an inferior tube—like I used the tube is ruined.

The Scissors Test

Take sample piece of tube one-fourth inch by three inches. Stretch to nine inches or three times its original length. Cut on the edge with the scissors. The cut should not be more than one-eighth inch across the sample. If the strip tears apart the rubber is inferior.

Nothing, Something, Everything

1. The scissors test costs nothing. It shows that Norwalk Tubes, red and gray, do not rip. It shows that the cut from puncture or blow-out can always be repaired.

2. You buy a Norwalk floating stock* Tube. That's something. You learn to know it as the highest quality tube made.

3. And then you look for everything, for a complete proposition. You ask whether there is a casing as good. There is—a Norwalk cord or non-skid fabric with handsome black tread and snow white sidewalls.

CITY TAKES NEWS OF PEACE CALMLY

Whistles and Bells Signalize Signing, but Delirium of Armistice Outburst Is Missing.

SHIP SAILS FOR HAMBURG

Word First Received by Fleet in Hudson Is Flashed Out by Wireless.

The blowing of whistles, ringing of church bells, and other demonstrations of jubilation marked the receipt of the news here yesterday that the Peace Treaty had been signed. A little before 11 o'clock in the morning the word was received, and this was the signal which started the clamor of felicitation that continued for more than an hour.

The news was first received by the United States fleet at anchor in the North River, and the announcement flashed by wireless from the flagship was picked up by vessels in the merchant marine. Shortly thereafter bunting was broken out on steamships lying on both sides of the river.

The signing of the treaty had been anticipated, and, while there was rejoicing that the war was formally ended, there was no excitement as was the case when the armistice was signed. The delirium of joy when the strain of war was ended by the armistice was missing.

"Peace" was the word that was sent to sea by radio, and the message was relayed from ship to ship until it caught up with the same announcement sent out from the other side of the Atlantic. The transports that came in with troops after the word had been received put up extra flags, and the soldiers on their decks wore broad grins for, as one of them put it, "We did lick the Germans after all." The men who came home carrying their overseas equipment all agreed that a difficult job had been well done.

Shortly after noon when the word came to the men on the Ripidan of the Furness-Withy Line, berthed at Bush Terminal, they got out a big pair of boots and some clothing and made an effigy of the Kaiser. They topped it with a German helmet and hung it from the mast head.

The steamship Ashburn, chartered by the Belgian-American Express and Navigation Company, signalized the formal signing by sailing from here for Hamburg flying the American flag. The ship is laden chiefly with food consigned to various individuals in Germany.

Peace Day was made the occasion for the making public of a letter from Secretary of War Baker to Secretary of the Navy Daniels in commendation and appreciation of the work of the transport fleet. The letter follows:

From the Secretary of the Navy.

To commander cruiser and transport force. Commander battleship force 1, via commander in chief U. S. fleet.

Subject: Operations of transport fleet during the month of May.

The following letter to the Secretary of the Navy is quoted for your information:

My Dear Mr. Secretary: The operations of the transport fleet during the month of May have been so successful that I believe it appropriate at this time to extend to you and the navy, particularly the officers and men directly connected with the operation of the cruiser and transport fleet, my hearty congratulations and appreciation of the War Department for the splendid service they have rendered during our overseas operations.

It is a source of great gratification to the War Department, and it must be to the navy, to look back over the past year and a half and note the success of these operations and to summarize just what has been accomplished in the matter of transporting troops and supplies to France. I am sure that this successful operation is due more to the close co-operation and splendid team work which has existed between the two services than to any other one thing.

I might mention by name a number of distinguished officers of the navy who have been directly connected with this important work, but I much prefer to commend as a whole the efficient and loyal personnel of both the army and navy, whose steadfast and untiring efforts have made possible the great success of this unprecedented undertaking.

If it meets your approval, I will be very much pleased if you will make known to the naval force engaged in the transport work the contents of this communication and assure them that the War Department fully appreciates the magnitude of the [illegible]

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

2. The Navy Department concurs with the Secretary of War in his appreciation of the operations of the transport fleet, not only during the month of May but during the last year and a half as well.

3. Copies of this letter will be forwarded by the Force Commander commanding officers, who will publish the letter to officers and crews of their ships on the first opportunity after its receipt.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy.

While the guns of the battleship Pennsylvania were becoming out the announcement that peace had again come into the world, those on shore were receiving the same news from the cries of the newsboys, the whistles and bells. Here and there flags began to appear. Along Riverside Drive the crowds on the streets could hear the blare of the bands on the vessels of the fleet at anchor as they celebrated the event.

A great many workers heard the news on their way home. Borough President Frank L. Dowling telephoned Peter Chiffo, janitor of the City Hall, and instructed him to proclaim the news to all downtown by ringing the bell in the City Hall tower. This was immediately done, and for fifteen minutes the bell continued to send out its glad tidings. Without logs is usually the symbol of celebration in the financial district and downtown generally. There were very little of the white streamers in evidence yesterday.

At St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, 127th Street and Fifth Avenue, of which the Rev. Dr. George R. Van De Water is rector, the organist and sexton were in the church when the news was received. Immediately the organist played "The Star-Spangled Banner," while the chimes pealed forth to the neighborhood proclaiming that victory was an actuality.

There was novelty, one incident in the celebration of the news indicating that Americans do not forget. Honor was paid to the former President whose motto was "Peace," and whose declaration, "Let us have peace," is a living memory, when a delegation from the Harlem Patriotic League, led by the Chairman, Mrs. Laura B. Price, marched over to Grant's Tomb on Riverside Drive and placed a wreath there.

BOSTON BELLS RUNG.

Warships in Harbor Fire Salutes as Peace Treaty Is Signed.

BOSTON, June 28.—With receipt of the word "peace" flashed broadcast by naval radio stations, all warships in port today fired the national salute. The same observance of the end of the war was sounded from the guns of the navy yard and other naval shore stations.

In Boston there was bedlam for a while, with the shouting of the newsboys with the "Extras," the shriek of horns and whistles, the ringing of bells—some just clanging madly, others sounding sweet airs, if peace. Mayor Peters ordered all bells to be rung, and additional flags broke out on all public buildings.

The Old North, in Salem Street, was one of the first churches to proclaim the glad tidings.

Canadian Celebration Postponed.

MONTREAL, June 28.—News of the signing of the Peace Treaty was received quietly here. The streets were, however, quickly decorated with bunting. Celebrations generally have been deferred until Monday, which is to be made a public holiday, and Tuesday, which is Dominion Day.

No Chicago Celebration.

CHICAGO, June 28.—The signing of the Peace Treaty was not officially celebrated when news of the act reached here this morning. City officials did not learn of the action until several hours later. The Board of Trade was uninfluenced by the signing because of the long anticipation of the act.

NEW STATES TO PAY.

Will Contribute "Liberation Funds" to the Cost of the War.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, June 27.—The reparation plan for Austria and Hungary, which will probably be adopted, now lacks only the initials of the Big Four signifying approval. The plan that the new States and the parts of States cut off from the old dual monarchy should bear their share of the burden, has been headed, for they will be made to pay also as the two fragments still classified as enemy States—German Austria and Hungary—could not pay the whole bill.

But there is a difference in the terms used in naming the funds which the enemies must pay and those which the new friendly States will contribute. For example, Hungary and Austria must pay reparation money, but the new States, Czechoslovakia and Jugoslavia and such groups of the old monarchy population as are added to Italy, Poland, and Rumania will contribute what is known as "a liberation fund" to the allied pool as their share of the expense of the war by which the Allies enabled them to escape the Hapsburg yoke.

The total amount these freed portions are called on to pay is 2,000,000,000 francs in gold, or approximately $400,000,000. As there are about 40,000,000 inhabitants all told in these several regions the cost of their liberation works out at $10 a piece.

The population of the enemy fragments of Hungary and Austria now totals about 13,000,000. Juts what they have got to pay is not yet clear. Hungary has ample resources, which will make some measure of reparation possible when she settles down to work, but the Italian prediction is that German-Austria, instead of being able to pay anything, will have to receive much financial help from the rest of the world before she can even get started as a separate State.

SMART BATHING ATTIRE

THE searching sun and emphasizing clarity of ocean air demand perfection in bathing attire—perfection from the jaunty cap or becoming beach hat down to the trim satin footwear.

Therefore bathing attire must be designed by artists and the picture completed with correct accessories, having in mind that there are three distinct types of bathing attire—the BEACH COSTUME which must be the dernier cri of fashion and a study in coloring—the BATHING DRESS which must be smart in and out of the water—and the SWIMMING SUIT which must be a clever combination of feminine charm and athletic comfort.

SIGNING BY CABLES

ADMINISTRATION IS ELATED

Polk Sends Congratulations to the President and Daniels Orders Naval Salutes of 21 Guns.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Administration leaders in Washington were greatly relieved when the State Department announced that the Peace Treaty with Germany had been signed, and this was reflected in the action of Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, in sending broadcast a message to American naval vessels and stations around the world, announcing that the treaty had been signed, and ordering every ship and shore station, upon receipt of the news of the signing of the treaty, to fire a salute of twenty-one guns. How the news reached Washington was summarized tonight in this official statement from the State Department:

"The first news of the signing of the treaty of all peace pacts was flashed to the United States today over a special Government circuit between Versailles and Washington. Over this wire of approximately 3,000 miles of ocean cable and land telegraph, set up for almost instantaneous transmission, came to the department this first outline of the proceedings of the day, with London, Newfoundland, and New York the only relay points on the long stretch of line.

"This special service direct to the Department of State from the chateau at Versailles was arranged at the instance of the American Mission to the Peace Conference, and carried out under the directions of the Acting Secretary of State, Frank L. Polk, who has just been confirmed as the Under-Secretary of State. The Assistant Secretary of State, William J. Phillips, as Acting Secretary of State, today in the absence of Mr. Polk, personally watched the opening of the circuit and the transmission of the first messages.

"The American mission at the Peace Conference had advised the Department of State several days in advance that on the day of the signing the circuit would be arranged and messages sent over it from the mission at Versailles to be given immediately to the press to facilitate the news to the American public. It was planned in advance to have this circuit ready at 10 o'clock, Washington time, today, which is 3 o'clock in the afternoon, Paris time. It was planned to file an outline of the program of the day, a series of bulletins on the progress of events. All time given in these messages was to be Paris time.

Announced Calling of Session.

"Acting Secretary of State Phillips announced the news at the Department as soon as the bulletins began arriving over the wire. The first bulletin of the actual proceedings announced the calling of the session to order by M. Clemenceau, the President of the Peace Conference.

"'There was practically instantaneous service over this special circuit,' said Acting Secretary Phillips. 'The signing began at 3:12 P. M., Paris time, received 10:22 A. M., Washington time, which is accounted for by the difference in time between Washington and Versailles. Dr. Herman Mueller, the German Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Dr. Johannes Bell, the Colonial Minister of Germany, were the first to sign the historic document, the former at 3:12, Paris time, and the latter at 3:13, each signing being immediately flashed over the wire. President Wilson signed at 3:14 P. M., Secretary Lansing and the others of the American delegation signing immediately following. Next came the British plenipotentiaries, and then all the other delegations in the order set forth in the treaty.'"

The developments of the signing ceremony were told in bulletins direct from Versailles, beginning with the announcement that M. Clemenceau had called the session to order, earlier notice having been given of the procedure to be followed. The principal bulletins, dated Versailles, were:

"3:12 P. M.—Mueller signs treaty for Germany."

"3:13 P. M.—Bell signs treaty for Germany."

"3:14 P. M.—Wilson signs treaty."

"American delegation finished signing at 3:15. Order was Lansing, White, House, and Bliss."

"The other delegations, headed by the British, signed after the American plenipotentiaries in the order set forth in the treaty."

These and other bulletins, including a translation of the opening remarks of M. Clemenceau, President of the Peace Conference, and the fact that the Chinese plenipotentiaries did not sign, were promptly given to the press, the bulletin service for hurrying the news to America ending at 11:26 A. M., Washington time.

The procedure was outlined in an early message which read:

"Clemenceau will call the meeting to order and say that they have assembled for the purpose of signing the treaty, the protocol, and the Rhine arrangement. The German plenipotentiaries, Mueller and Bell, will then be invited to sign all three documents, and when they have done so the Allies will commence signing, doing so by delegations. Thus all the Americans will sign and be followed by other delegations."

The following message of congratulations on the completion of your great work. The American people will be ever proud of what you did as their representative for the peace of the world."

The Chinese plenipotentiaries did not sign, and the following message from Versailles was made public:

"The Chinese plenipotentiaries do not sign, and are not present. They have written to the President of the conference, stating that they would not be present and they are awaiting instructions from their Government."

Another message read:

"The protocol will be signed by all those who sign the treaty. The Rhine arrangement will be signed by the German, American, Belgian, British, and French plenipotentiaries."

The opening of the session by M. Clemenceau was reported in a message received at the department at 10:31 A. M., Washington time, and the closing of the session was reported in this message, received at 11:20 A. M., Washington time:

"All of the plenipotentiaries having signed the treaty, M. Clemenceau declared the session closed."

The following translation of the opening remarks of M. Clemenceau was received by the State Department:

"The session is opened. The allied and associated powers on one side and the German reich on the other side have come to an agreement on the conditions of peace. The text has been completed, drafted, and the President of the conference has stated in writing that the text that is about to be signed now is identical with the 200 copies that have been delivered to the German delegation. The signatures will be given now and they amount to a solemn undertaking faithfully and loyally to execute the conditions embodied by this treaty of peace. I now invite the delegates of the German reich to sign the treaty."

FRENCH SEE BOGEY IN GERMAN OUTBREAKS

Distrust Political Manoeuvrings, but Believe Power for Harm Is Gone.

By WALTER DURANTY.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, June 27.—French suspicion of Germany has been crystallized into certainty by events of the past few days. The Prussian military action against Poland, following the Scapa Flow incident, and the burning of the French flags, is quoted in support of their views by many people here who from the outset refused to believe that the Germans could be influenced by anything but compulsion. Those who think this, and among the French they are in the great majority, don't consider that the new outbreak of Spartacism in Germany in any way weakens the theory that the present German Government is really the same as the old one only dressed in new democratic disguise. On the contrary, they argue that Spartacism is simply a bogey to frighten the Allies, which the German leaders bring out and put back at will when they think it is needed.

A somewhat different view was expressed by a high French officer who has not only held a command in occupied German territory, but has visited the interior on certain official missions. He said:

"In my opinion, practically all parties in Germany really wanted peace, whatever some of them said to the contrary. Even the former Pan German Nationalists who shouted loudest against signature are well aware that little can be done to further the ambitious plans which they doubtless hold as long as the allied military menace overhangs them.

"Much the same was the case with the Spartacides, who represent the element at the extreme opposite of the German political scale. The moderate parties realize better than either of the two extremes that the nation as a whole is utterly weary of struggling and hardship. For the moment, at least, their wants are limited to peace and food.

"Unless I mistake, one of the first results of peace will be a precipitation, as it were, of the different compounds forming the present Germany; that is, there will be a sharper line of cleavage between the various parties. Both the Spartacides and the Nationalists will probably try to seize power, but it is not unlikely that their efforts will more or less neutralize each other, and in the final event I am convinced that they will both fail through the apathy of the rest of the nation.

"Kaiserism has ruined the Germans. Is it likely they would be thrilled to action by its ghost? Spartacism is a mad plunge into the unknown, and Germany today has neither the strength nor the spirit for so desperate an adventure."

LEAGUE OF NATIONS DRAFT

they were not supported by Senator McCumber and others of the ultra-conservative element. By the time the treaty reaches the Senate it is thought that some compromise may be effected between these two extreme Republican points of view.

Senator Borah attacked the document, in an interview, as "vicious" from the American point of view. He said that it would have to be appreciably altered if the Senate were to accept it. He did not insist, as before, that there must be direct amendments to the body of the covenant, but he did insist that Article X. and the provision giving Shantung rights to Japan should be eliminated. The Idaho Senator is considering whether this can be effectively done through an unequivocal qualifying resolution, such as Senator Root has suggested.

In all the comments of Republican Senators it was evident that the League's opponents were beginning to concentrate upon the points to which objection has been so unreservedly expressed in the last two months. While Senator Lodge would not discuss the sudden turn in the fight, he did remark that at no time had the situation, from the point of view of the Republican opponents of the League, been so satisfactory. Mr. Lodge, with other Senate Republican leaders, built the President's message, together with his interview in Paris urging that the Senate accept the League of Nations as it stood, had merely served to solidify the opposition to the covenant.

The Senate expects to have the treaty before it a week or next Monday, at the latest. Immediately upon its being submitted the Foreign Relations Committee will take it up. Sentiment for open hearings is strong on both sides of the Senate, and it is not unlikely that the Foreign Relations Committee may decide on these. If there are some matters that the committee believes should be considered behind closed doors, it was said today that it might agree to that procedure, while holding the rest of the proceedings in public.

The Democrats count upon at least three Republicans to stand with them in opposing any qualifying resolution that might endanger the ratification of the treaty. They are Mr. McCumber, Mr. McNary, and Mr. Colt of Rhode Island. As against the adverse treaty of the League, they give the votes of Senators Reed of Missouri and Gore of Oklahoma to the opponents. If these were the only defections from the two sides of the chamber, the vote would be a tie, 48 to 48, in which event the effort to adopt such a resolution would fail. But the Democrats believe they can get at least one more Republican vote so as to have a majority of one in a clear-cut defeat.

Republican Senators, however, after the announcement of Senators McCumber and McNary, as to qualifying resolutions, felt encouraged to predict that the fight for amendment by reservation would succeed.

In comments upon the League of Nations, as embraced in the Treaty of Peace, foes of the League today pointed to the disposition of the Shantung peninsula as a feature that should be cut from the treaty. Senator Borah characterized the Shantung agreement as one that "no man can unblushingly defend." He would not vote for the treaty, he said, with the Shantung provision in it.

Injecting the Irish Question.

An Administration Senator, discussing the fight that would be made against the covenant, spoke of the Irish question. He had been informed by a Senator, he said, that a resolution would be offered in the Senate to recognize Ireland's right of independence. This, he said, would be offered on the ground that it was consistent with the enunciation in favor of self-determination of small nations.

China's refusal to sign the treaty of peace, because of the Shantung provision, was pointed to by foes of the covenant as "an evidence" of the difficulties in the path of the League of Nations. They insisted that the United States should go on record, through the Senate, as disapproving the act of the conference in giving Japan rights in that peninsula.

In announcing that he would support a qualifying resolution to safeguard the Monroe Doctrine and assure America's determination of its purely domestic affairs, Senator McCumber said the Senate ought to make sure that the United States sacrificed nothing of its sovereignty in accepting the League of Nations.

Senator McCumber's Position.

"I believe that it may be necessary for the Senate to adopt explanatory resolutions with regard to certain portions of the treaty in order that our position with respect to them may be made clear to the world," said the Senator.

"I think the proponents of the League in the Senate should concede

SEES "GERMAN HONOR CARRIED TO ITS GRAVE"

Junker Paper Threatens Vengeance—Tageblatt Berates "Scrap of Paper."

BERLIN, June 28. (Associated Press.)—Meagre editorial reference is made in the German papers this morning to the ceremony of signing the treaty at Versailles. The Pan German Deutsche Zeitung, however, prints the following across its front page:

"German honor today will be carried to its grave in the Hall of Mirrors, in which, in the glorious year of '71 the German Empire was resurrected in all its former splendor. Lest we forget. In restless labor the German people will again strive to attain that place among the nations of the world to which it is entitled. Then vengeance for the disgrace of 1919."

The Tageblatt says:

"The German people reject the treaty which its delegates are signing today, and it does not believe for a single moment that it will endure. Despite the fact that it is written on parchment, it remains a scrap of paper, because it is a mockery of all the laws of reason and morals and the most disgraceful exhibit in the museum of civilization."

HISSES FOR WILSON IN CARNEGIE HALL

ATTACK ARTICLE TEN

It Is Held to Pledge the Nation to Guarantee the Territory of Other League Members.

Before an audience that was apparently nearly 100 per cent. Irish by birth, descent, or sympathy, United States Senators Hiram Johnson of California and James A. Reed of Missouri, speaking at Carnegie Hall last night under the auspices of the League for the Preservation of American Independence, attacked the covenant of the League of Nations and elicited hisses and boos in mentioning the name of President Wilson and when referring to Great Britain's share of benefits obtained through the Peace Treaty. The meeting was the first one held by the league which plans to take the fight against the covenant to the people of the country. George W. Pepper of Philadelphia was Chairman.

In concluding his speech Senator Johnson said he would not allow Woodrow Wilson or any other man to rob him of his patriotism. Hisses came from every part of the house at the mention of the name of the President. In his address Mr. Pepper read the names of some of the subscribers to the League to Enforce Peace. Among them was Dwight W. Morrow of J. P. Morgan & Co. There were boos and hisses at the mention of the Morgan firm and one Irishman cried out, "They're a bunch of Anglo-maniacs." The hall was packed with 4,000 men and women, and several thousand were unable to obtain admission.

Senator Reed said that if England was entitled to a delegate for every self-governing dominion then the United States was entitled to one vote for every State in the Union. He declared that Britain's statesmen went to the Peace Conference as practical men, not dreamers. A voice yelled, "They're first-class trimmers" and there was laughter.

There was applause when Senator Reed asserted that American soldiers went to war to fight the Germans and not for the Fourteen Points. The only applause for Great Britain occurred when after saying that he was not opposed to Great Britain, Senator Reed declared that the Englishmen knew how to fight, and just before the Americans entered the battle they stood with their backs to the wall ready to die.

The addresses were punctuated with interruptions in spite of the request of Senator Reed that he be permitted to speak without applause.

Senator Reed charged that there was a plot on for American capitalists to furnish large sums of money for the rehabilitation of Europe and to obtain the guarantee of these future obligations as well as the payment of the obligations already held by involving the United States in the League of Nations. In this way the United States, he asserted, would be compelled to underwrite "in the tears of our women and the blood of our sons the securities held by these international profiteers."

The fire of both speakers centred on Article X., which they said pledged the United States to engage itself to guarantee the existing territory of every nation member of the League.

Saying that he would treat only those outstanding, plain propositions of the League covenant which seemed to him to present "a case upon which any of us may with absolute confidence go to our people," Senator Johnson devoted himself to discussion of what he termed "the un-American Article 10," and the provisions with respect to the Monroe Doctrine, the immigration issue, and other questions of so-called internal policy.

He asserted that the League covenant, "a document of transcendent importance," had been drawn up in secrecy, and that popular support for it in this country had been promoted by a tremendous national propaganda, "paid for by millions upon millions of dollars, wrung by taxation from an overburdened people."

"We have been picking our pockets to poison our minds," he continued, explaining that our recent national propaganda had been devoted, "not to the dissemination of the truth, but to deceiving the people and glorifying those whom they had raised to high position."

"The heavy hand of a wartime Government," he added, had in the East destroyed the liberty of the press and manufactured public opinion which but echoed what the national propaganda decreed, and prevented the people from knowing the facts and possibilities of the League of Nations.

He said that Czar Alexander I. of Russia, who proclaimed the Holy Alliance, had been "as prolific in idealistic sentences and nebulous altruistic generalities as some of our modern statesmen." The League of Nations preamble, he said, is "of like character with that of the Quadruple Alliance, not as lofty in purpose or of such broad Christianity as the Holy Alliance, but with the same underlying principles in reference to existing treaties."

Senator Johnson asserted that it was unthinkable that any American would subscribe to Article 10, or that any American could subscribe to it. He described the amendment to the League covenant alleged to be designed to safeguard the Monroe Doctrine as "a fraud, a delusion, and a snare."

"As a Californian, I am not ready to submit any race problems we may have to the jurisdiction of the Council of the League of Nations or to the League itself. I will not leave to foreign powers whether it is a domestic or an international problem. That is for us, and us alone, to decide."

"The League of Nations," he continued, "comes to us after its principal members have been gorged with territory, with their boundaries and their limits increased beyond the wildest dreams, and with other immense tracts of the world's surface yet to be distributed among them. After these extraordinary accessions of territory, when each of the four nations possesses lands far greater than ever before, the one going, solvent, national concern on earth undertakes by Article 10 to guarantee forever these extraordinary territorial limits."

PREDICT EARLY FALL OF HUNGARIAN REDS

Bela Kun Is Said to Have Sent His Possessions Abroad Through an Italian.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, June 25, (via Geneva.)—The Social Democratic Party in Budapest, whose leaders have left the Bolshevist Cabinet and which comprises the labor unions, has now decided upon a course of opposition to the Bolshevist, whose situation is aggravated by a disastrous lack of food.

Even proletarians' food tickets last week were unredeemed, and the Bolshevist cause is considered hopeless. According to Budapest advices, the Bolshevist regime is likely soon to be replaced by a Socialist Cabinet to be formed by Leader Weltner.

I learn from a reliable source that Bela Kun, helped by an Italian friend, has succeeded in getting his property and papers safely abroad.

AIM TO FORM 'DIRECTORATE'

Generals at Koenigsberg Incite Resistance to Treaty, but Troops Are Apathetic.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, June 25, (via Copenhagen.)—Perhaps the most formidable among the difficulties which the German Government is encountering in fulfilling its obligations under the Versailles treaty is the delivery of territory to Poland.

After conversation with Prime Minister Bauer, the NEW YORK TIMES correspondent is convinced that, though bitterness accumulates in their hearts, the members of the present Government are desirous of carrying out the conditions with absolute honesty. This certainly applies to the territorial changes in the east, but fear that General Hoffmann's example might prove contagious is already reinforced by reports from Königsburg, where a large meeting of reactionaries, addressed by the Generals commanding in the east, adopted the following resolution:

"Many thousands of East Prussian citizens, male and female, assembled in Königsberg, declare that they feel betrayed and sold out by the miserable peace which the Government has concluded. They promise that they will resist any hostile attacks by the Poles with all their power and protect our beloved eastern border land. Let the enemy come. The east is prepared to receive him."

This resolution was sent to Generals Hoffman, Estorf, Quast, and Lossberg.

Hoffmann, who was dismissed last night, will probably be prosecuted for attempted high treason, but the loyalty

It is believed that the reactionaries, under the leadership of the German National Volkspartei, have engineered a scheme for separating the eastern provinces from the Berlin Government and forming of "directorate" consisting of East Prussia, West Prussia, Pomerania, and Silesia. The "directorate" is to refuse to recognise the treaty and resume war with Poland.

Doubtless many army officers employed in the volunteer formations generally or in the defence of the eastern borderlands sympathise with this movement. The junker class, having a stronghold in those provinces, has accumulated enough arms and ammunition to equip every able bodied man, if he has not already hidden his rifle under his bed. Still, it is doubtful if the farm hands and other employes will again follow the lead of the junkers after their experience of the last three years.

Indications that the rank and file of the eastern army, counting about 350,000 men, cannot be depended upon by the Junkers, are certainly increasing. THE TIMES correspondent talked with a business man from Thorn yesterday who supplies certain provisions for the

GREAT GERMAN FUND TO CUT FOOD PRICES

Government to Spend $1,250,000,000, It Is Said, Thus to Remove Cause of Unrest.

BERLIN, June 27, (Associated Press.)—German parliamentary circles, according to the Cologne Gazette, have information that the Government will shortly request an appropriation of a sum reported to be 5,000,000,000 marks to be devoted to forcing down food prices, the high level of which is believed to be at the bottom of the whole social unrest.

On the other hand, according to the same sources, the Government proposes to proceed uncompromisingly against all attempts at sabotage of the nation's economic revival through strikes and political agitation.

LONDON, June 28.—The German Minister of Railways, who is negotiating with the striking railway workers, told them yesterday that their demands could not be met owing to the financial position of the country, according to a Reuter dispatch from Berlin.

He promised them, however, it is said, that food prices would be reduced and that rations would be fixed for the entire nation, agreeing that during the next three months 1,500,000,000 marks would be applied by the Government to relieving the food situation.

"MAKES A NEW WORLD."

World Peace Foundation Rejoices in the Signing of the Treaty.

BOSTON, June 28.—The World Peace Foundation, in a statement issued by its secretaries tonight, said:

"The verdict of history will unquestionably be that the Peace of Paris carries into effect to a remarkable degree the program accepted in advance by the peoples of the world and embodied in the Fourteen Points put forth by the American Government on Jan. 8, 1918. The treaty as signed makes a new world, politically, physically, morally, and spiritually. It has set the world upon a new path of progress. It marks the triumph of American ideas, policies, and institutions, by extending to a league of sovereign nations the democratic principles first embodied in our league of sovereign States."

NAVAL OFFICERS GET THE LEGION OF HONOR

France Decorates Admiral Mayo and More Than a Score of Other Americans.

ST. SEINE CONFERS INSIGNIA

France yesterday honored with the decoration of the Legion of Honor more than a score of American naval officers, among them the retiring Commander in Chief of the Atlantic Fleet and some of the higher ranking officers who served in important capacities under Admirals Sims, Wilson, and Rodman in European waters. While the impressive ceremony of conferring the insignia on Admiral Mayo and the other officers was under way the news that the Peace Treaty had been signed was released to the fleet flagship, the superdreadnought Pennsylvania, and immediately the saluting guns of that giant battleship crashed out a salute of twenty-one guns in honor of the historic event at Versailles. While the guns of the Pennsylvania were thundering out the great news the other dreadnoughts in the Hudson River column dressed ship and the bands hurriedly assembled and let go with "The Star-Spangled Banner," then the "Marseillaise," "God Save the King," and the other national anthems of the victorious allied nations.

The French Government was represented at the ceremony on the flagship Pennsylvania by Captain St. Seine, the naval attaché of the French Embassy in Washington. Accompanied by Lieutenant Lefevre, also of the naval staff of the French Embassy, Captain St. Seine came on board the Pennsylvania at 10 o'clock yesterday morning. He was welcomed by Admiral Mayo, the retiring, and Admiral Wilson the incoming Commander in Chief of the fleet in Atlantic waters. The ceremony of conferring the insignia took place on the quarterdeck and lasted about one hour.

Admiral Mayo, who hauls down his four-starred pennant tomorrow morning, was the first to receive the insignia, awarded to him, Captain St. Seine pointed out, because of eminent and meritorious services rendered the allied cause as the ranking American officer afloat during the war. Admiral Mayo received the rank of Grand Officer of the Legion. The second officer decorated was Captain Nathan C. Twining, who was Admiral Sims's Chief of Staff in London, who was made an Officer of the Legion. Captain Orton P. Jackson, Chief of Staff of the Atlantic Fleet, was the third officer honored, while Captain Thomas P. Magruder was the fourth. Four of the other officers decorated were in civilian clothes, having been demobilized some days ago. They were Commander Frank P. Baldwin, Lieut. Commanders J. M. B. Smith and C. F. Gilpin, and Ensign H. G. Campbell.

The other officers decorated were: Captain John Halligan, chief of staff of Admiral Wilson, who was the commander of United States naval forces in France; Captain G. Howe, who was flotilla commander of the destroyers operating in French waters; Captain T. P. Kurtz, in charge of operations under Admiral Wilson; Commander Frank P. Baldwin, retired, who was Port Officer at Brest, St. Nazaire and Bordeaux; Commander R. P. Craft, U. S. S. Aphrodite; Commander I. C. Johnson, who was Port Officer at Bordeaux; Commander H. E. Shoemaker, U. S. S. Prometheus; Commander D. W. Fuller, U. S. S. Tucker; Commander Francis Cogswell, U. S. S. Cummings; Lieut. Commander N. R. Vanderveer, U. S. S. Warrington; Lieut. Commander F. W. Rockwell, U. S. S. Winslow; Lieut. Commander M. B. McComb, U. S. S. Craven; Lieut. Commander C. E. Gillis, U. S. N. R. F.; Lieut. Commander J. M. B. Smith, U. S. S. Walke; Lieut. Commander R. C. Le Conte, U. S. N. R. F. Medical Corps; Lieut. G. J. Romulus, who was at the naval air station at Brest; Lieut. K. R. Smith, U. S. N. R. F.; Lieut. J. A. Sellards, U. S. S. Prometheus; Lieut. R. E. Read, U. S. N. R. F., who was at naval aviation headquarters in Paris; Ensign G. V. James, U. S. N. R. F., U. S. S. Edward Luckenbach; Ensign E. G. Rose, U. S. N. R. F., and Ensign H. G. Campbell, U. S. N. R. F., who was at the naval aviation station at Brest.

Mayo Held in High Esteem.

Despite the music and the booming of peace guns and the impressive ceremonies that attended the conferring of the insignia of the famous French honor organization on the officers, there was a distinct atmosphere of sadness aboard the Pennsylvania. Everybody present realized that it was probably the last official function on board the flagship in which Mayo, the tall Vermont Admiral, will take part. One of Admiral Mayo's staff officers, an officer who has been with him during practically all the four years that he has held the navy's highest sea command, related, yesterday, the story of his chief's naval career.

"On Monday," he said, "the Admiral, whom we all love so well, will walk down the gangplank of the Pennsylvania, and as a final tribute to him and to his work we of his staff are going to row him ashore. He returns to shore duty demoted in rank, for when his four-star Admiral's flag falls from the hands of the Quartermaster he becomes just a plain Rear Admiral. Such is the law of the navy.

"Admiral Mayo has commanded the fleet for three years. He is the man who stood for American rights in Mexico and for the honor of the flag when he demanded Huerta to salute it at Tampico.

When Admiral Mayo's flag goes down he will turn over to his successor, Admiral Wilson, an efficient fleet, well trained. And the Admiral will step over the side beloved by the officers, liked by the gobs. Admiral Mayo will assume the rank of Rear Admiral and become the head of the Selection Board and later will become a member of the General Board of the Navy Department.

GERMANY AIMING FOR MEXICAN TRADE

Plans Made Long Ago to Resume Commercial Relations After the War.

PROPAGANDA CONTINUED

Teutons Formed Societies to Spread Kultur and Commerce While They Were Still Fighting.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, June 27.—Germany figures that Mexico will supply a large part of her raw materials from now on. She believes that Mexico is sympathetic. She believes that Mexico will prefer German markets to United States markets. She counts on this with a bland assurance that is startling if not disagreeable.

Plans have been under way for months to curry favor with Mexican exporters and the Mexican Government with a view to more relations of an advantageous nature.

There came into my hands today an interesting illustration of this German game. It is a little pamphlet put out by the German electrical trust and published by the Allgemeiner Anzeiger fur Chemnitzer Umgebung. Here is a part of this document:

"One of the few countries that will immediately resume commercial relations with us after peace is signed is Mexico. Mexican conditions are well understood in our exports but further explanation will not be amiss."

Then the pamphlet gives eloquent proof that German propaganda did not die with her military defeat, for the pamphlet says:

"In Munich there was formed in 1918 a Germán-Mexican society composed of educated people. The purpose of this society was to disseminate information about Mexico, lend impetus to a study of Spanish, bringing about the teaching of the German language and German kultur in Mexican schools, inducing Mexican salesmen to visit Germany and inducing Mexican youths to attend German universities. A monthly paper is also issued, entitled 'Deutsch Mexikanische Rundschau.'"

In March, 1918, a similar society was formed in Barmen with a charter membership of two hundred people.

In Montenegro there was organized a "German-Mexican Society," founded by influential Germans, whose purpose was to facilitate the exchange of raw materials and manufactured goods between the two countries. There was also the information society of the "Deutsche Mexikanischer Anzeiger."

The pamphlet then goes on to say that in 1911 Germany imported from Mexico goods to the value of 30,000,000 marks, and exported goods to the value of 60,000,000 marks. Then there is made this interesting statement:

"Seventy-five per cent. of Mexico's exports found their way to the United States, which regards Mexico as its warehouse. Of course, these exports will now go to Germany."

Giving details about hopes for relations with Mexico, the pamphlet concludes by saying:

"In 1913 there were 3,000 Germans in Mexico who were merchants, doctors, &c. They moved in the best circles, and are pioneers around whom our German immigrants will from now on settle. Our imports will consist of metals, petroleum, fibres, fruits, woods, &c.

"Our first duty is to secure from Mexico large imports of raw materials and not regard it as a dumping ground for German goods."

WON'T LEAD FIUME'S ARMY.

But Sam Benelli Insists Upon the City's Right to Form One.

ROME, June 28.—The people of Fiume have learned with great regret that the poet Sam Benelli, to whom they had offered the leadership and organization of the army, had refused the post. Although Benelli approves the project of raising an army, he says in his telegram:

"I desire for many reasons to cooperate in a different way to reach our aim. I cannot accept your invitation, but declare that I will always gladly offer my counsel.

In an interview he said, "Fiume has the right to form an army, for she has been for centuries recognized as a separate State, even by the Hapsburgs. As all the large and small States rising from the ruins of the Austrian Empire have armies, so Fiume has the right to one.

"I am now a citizen of Fiume and as such conceived the idea of its raising an army and have made every effort to realize it. Although for certain reasons which it is useless to recount, I don't wish to put myself at the head of this organization, I insist that this army is necessary to Fiume, and that perhaps if it had existed sooner it might have given a freer hand to our delegates in Paris, who, not having to worry about Fiume, would have had more time to think of our other rights and interests."

"SAFE AND SANE" FOURTH.

Attempts to Return to Old Methods of Celebration Defended.

Attempts to place the ban upon a "safe and sane" Fourth of July and to make of the national birthday a riot of mishaps, noise, and conflagrations, as in the old days, have been defeated by the Governors and Fire Marshals of all the States, according to an announcement made in this city yesterday by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Statewide proclamations have been issued, it is said, warning against laxity in enforcing ordinances for the protection of life and property, and municipalities and towns throughout the nation have arranged athletic games, historical pageants, community singing, and evening fireworks displays, under proper safeguards.

Governor P. W. Clement of Vermont, one of the many State Executives who pledged co-operation for a "safe and sane" holiday, wrote: "The war deprived the nation of too many of its stalwart citizens to risk injury or loss of life by return to a hazardous celebration of the Fourth of July. The thrift of labor in homes and property should not be exposed to fire and destruction by the carelessness of others."

CROZIER SHIFTS BLAME.

Says Secretary of War Did Not Act on Request for Preparedness.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Brig. Gen. Crozier, former Chief of the Ordnance Bureau, appearing today before the special House Investigating Committee to explain why his department was so unprepared when war came, declared he had repeatedly recommended extensions before the war, but without success. After the National Defense act was passed, he said, he submitted a request to the Secretary of War for a larger personnel and for authorization to contract for ordnance, but the request was not acted upon.

"When war was declared," he continued, "the army had 600 guns—a ridiculously small number; 800 field artillery pieces, a wholly inadequate supply of artillery ammunition, and other supplies in the same insufficient amounts. Orders had been placed for the various things needed, but deliveries had not started."

Fortunately, he added, the army had enough rifles to equip a million men, and 200,000,000 rounds of rifle ammunition.

General Crozier said after the declaration of war every means was used to obtain needed supplies.

He repeated time and again that a mistake had been made in his conviction. To Sheriff Phineas Seaman he said:

"I loved that women to her death."

It was the second time since he was found guilty that the doctor had lost the calm demeanor that marked his every appearance in court, even when the jury's verdict was announced. Between sobs the doctor repeated over and over again: "A grave mistake has been made."

When Dr. Wilkins was taken to his cell last night he was thoroughly searched by the prison attendants and everything by which he could do bodily harm to himself, including a lead pencil, was taken from him. A few tablets which he had in his possession were examined by physicians at the jail and were found to be harmless. The guards at the jail have been doubled as a precaution against the doctor harming himself. These guards walk past the doctor's cell at fifteen-minute intervals.

Doctor Wilkins ate the regular prison breakfast, consisting of bread and coffee. His appetite is not of the best, jail officials say. He read the morning papers and took considerable interest in the accounts of his conviction.

After Dr. Wilkins is sentenced next Tuesday he will be taken immediately in an automobile to Sing Sing Prison, accompanied by Sheriff Seaman and County Detective Carman Plant.

When asked in his cell if he had anything to say Dr. Wilkins replied:

"The verdict of the jury rendered certainly was unlooked for and stunned me. I was placed in a room Thursday night, all night, with a guard who was relieved every two hours. This room was directly under the jury room. It was a high posted room with an eighteen foot ceiling. The noise of angry voices reached me, threatening and calling of vile names was plainly to be heard. The guards all said that they never before heard such a riot going on in a jury room—the jumping or falling on the floor would shake the ceiling.

"When the jury returned to the courtroom one of the jurors addressed Judge Manning, saying that he wished to report an occurrence in the jury room. The judge said that he did not care to hear anything that occurred in the jury room. I think this was an error of judgment. I think this man would have stated that he was assaulted by another juror for disagreeing with him. It was undoubtedly true that physically strong jurors were intimidating weaker jurors by browbeating them and threatening them for disagreeing with them.

"This violent language that was so plainly heard in the jury room indicates this fact. Even the guard called my attention to a window in the corridor, away off on the south wing, where a lot of rollers were looking up toward the jury room, and who were attracted by the loud noises coming from the jury.

"Considering all the underhand detective work done in this case, it would seem an error of judgment to allow the jurors to roam wherever they pleased in two different weeks, from Friday noon until Monday morning at 10 o'clock. In a case where a human life is at stake that jury should have been kept under a guard all the time. It looks inconsistent that if a juror had a ten-minute recess to go to the dressing room, an officer would be detailed to accompany him. Then he would be allowed to roam around two and a half days alone where he chose, coming in contact with detectives or anybody.

"The verdict was an erroneous one and an innocent man has been convicted. Mrs. Wilkins was my devoted companion, my nurse, and financial backer. She was in vigorous health, ten years younger than I. I handled the property as if it was my own. It could not have been more so if it was in my name actually. I knew she would outlive me and never thought or cared what final disposition she would make of it. No man was ever more considerate or devoted to his wife than I was to her. I needed her more than she did me as I was a semi-invalid."

Charles N. Wysong, attorney for Dr. Wilkins, said his client was all broken up over his conviction. He said he was going to see every one of the jurors to find out whether any undue influence was exerted upon them to return their verdict.

ABSOLVES STOCK FIRM.

Dooling Returns Books Requested for Examination in Inquiry.

Assistant District Attorney Dooling, who had asked C. W. Galvin & Company, at 30 Broad Street, for permission to examine some of their books and papers in connection with a complaint by Dr. Johannes Meyer, of 2088 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, to the effect that he had paid $100 for stock and that the firm denied receiving the deposit, returned the books to the firm on Friday and discontinued the investigation.

C. W. Galvin, after a conference with Dooling, said:

"All of our books were returned and Mr. Dooling expressed himself as perfectly satisfied with the proof we submitted that the question of this deposit was an error on the part of a salesman. This salesman, Samuel J. Smith, went with me to the District Attorney's office, identified the signature as his on the receipt held by the latter, but said he had not reported the payment to the firm because he had forgotten the matter entirely. Smith will return the amount to the customer."

Irving Bloom, secretary of C. W. Galvin & Company, said his firm had written to the District Attorney some days ago offering to aid him in his investigation in the financial district, and suggesting that so far as his company was concerned they would be perfectly willing at any time to show their books and details of stock business to Mr. Swann, if he had any inquiry to make of them. Bloom said the complaint from the District Attorney's office concerning Meyer's claim followed several days later.

RAND SCHOOL HEADS PLAN COURT ACTION

Will Move to Vacate Search Warrant Under Which Raid Was Conducted.

SEES ALIENS IN CONTROL

Member of Lusk Committee Calls Institution a Clearing House for Radical Views.

After a conference late yesterday afternoon between officials and counsel of the Rand School of Social Science, it was announced that action would be taken in the courts tomorrow for the purpose of vacating the search warrant, issued by Chief Magistrate McAdoo, under which the school was raided a week ago yesterday by agents of the legislative committee investigating seditious activities and propaganda in this State. Similar action, it was announced, would also be taken with regard to another search warrant issued by the Chief Magistrate under which agents of the committee forced the safe of the Commonwealth Center, which owns the building, in which the school is located. The lawyers attending the conference were S. John Block and L. M. Sackin. Miss Bertha H. Mailly, secretary of the Rand School, and Alexander I. Trachtenberg, director of its research department, represented the school management. Algernon Lee, educational director, is out of town on his vacation.

Mr. Block said after the conference that the search warrants seemed to be based upon their face and that in any event the Chief Magistrate had exceeded his legal authority in issuing them upon the statements of fact set forth in the affidavit of Clarence L. Converse, one of the committee's agents, to whom the warrants were granted.

Commenting on the report that Attorney-General Charles D. Newton was taking legal steps to forfeit the charter of the American Socialist Society, under which the school has been operated, on the ground the society was convicted in the Federal Courts and fined for circulating seditious literature through the school's publishing department, Mr. Block said:

"We have not received any official notification of such proceedings and we cannot accept the newspaper reports as such notification. We will say, however, that there is absolutely no legal ground upon which the charter of the society can be revoked. It is quite possible, however, as we have seen by experience, that legal grounds may be ignored by those who seek to injure the school, which is a law-abiding and absolutely legal institution."

Stir About School.

There was a constant stir about the Rand School yesterday afternoon as hundreds of its students and others that haunt its reading rooms flocked to the People's House to learn the latest developments in the controversy with the legislative committee. Others who had been attracted by a report that there was to be another raid hung about the main entrance of the People's House prepared for any emergency.

Members and functionaries of the legislative committee who have had an opportunity to examine the truckload of documents seized from the three radical centres have reached the conclusion that the differences between the radical "left" and conservative "right" wings of the Socialist Party are less real than the bitterness of the factional controversy within Socialist circles would indicate.

The papers seized are from centres typical of the shades of opinion that run within the radical movement in this country. The apologists for the Rand School profess to pride themselves upon the fact that, as socialism goes, the Rand School is a citadel of conservatism and constructive thought. The papers seized at the "left" wing headquarters, where John Reed, once mentioned for the post of "consul" in this city from the Bolshevist régime in Russia, was the central figure and dominating influence, are regarded as representative of a more radical school of thought than the People's House brand, and the grist from the Russian I. W. W. headquarters might be supposed to represent the activities and trend of thought among radicals who favor direct action and do not apologize for doing so.

"However," said a member of the investigating body, "the Rand School and the Soviet Russian Mission, judging from the papers that have come under our observation, would appear to be a clearing house in which these different schools of thought meet, and are focused toward one common purpose—the establishment of a Soviet form of government in this country. After what I have observed of documentary evidence I feel absolutely justified in saying that there does not exist in this country the chasm that we meet in the countries of Europe between the extremist groups frankly committed to the overthrow of Governments by force and violence when necessary, and those who believe in accomplishing the same purpose through peaceful, political action."

Aliens in Ascendency.

The ascendency of the alien element in the membership and shaping of policies of the radical organization is another matter which, after weeks of study is giving members of the Legislative Committee serious concern. Within the Socialist Party, for instance, there are various foreign language groups, known as "federations," the membership of which unquestionably would outnumber the English speaking Socialists. These foreign groups depend for their inspiration on the programs of the radical parties in the various European countries represented in the hyphenated titles of their organizations.

Under the rules of the Socialist Party citizenship is not a qualification either for membership or for tenure of office in the governing bodies. It is said to say that one-half of the members of governing committees of the various "foreign language federations" have not been naturalized. The danger lurking behind these conditions was defined by a member of the committee in this language:

"It is not at all out of the question that Presidential nominations and platforms in this country may be dictated from Bolshevist Russia, once the Bolshevists attain power. Everything at present developments among the radicals in this country points to a program under which the American radicals are preparing to take a leading part in forming all the radicals of the world into a third 'Internationale.'"

It was stated last night that when the legislative committee resumes its public hearings on July 9 evidence will be produced to reveal the sources from which the Rand School of Social Science is receiving financial backing at present. An examination of the books and accounts of that institution, according to one of the investigators of the committee, would indicate a monthly income of $7,000 to $8,000 from lectures, courses of instruction and the sale of radical literature.

The Rand Fund, representing an endowment from Mrs. Carrie Rand and her daughter, Mrs. Carrie Rand Herron, of about $200,000 in 1906, when the school was founded, has yielded less interest in recent years, owing to the withdrawal of quotas allotted in the will to heirs who, by this time, have attained maturity.

Mrs. Mailly said last night that the evidence produced before the Lusk committee yesterday, which showed that Professor Scott Nearing had been paid $610 from the Rand School offering a thirty-day period in April and May was misleading in that at all [illegible] of March, derived from the [illegible] for the Soviet Mrs. Mailly said [illegible] the amount represented payments due to Mr. Nearing which had accumulated over a long period, and included [illegible] for services which had no connection with the school itself.

Mrs. Mailly said with reference to the testimony before the committee concerning the memorandum on radical propaganda among the negroes, written by W. A. Domingo, that it was merely a memorandum sent to the Rand School to be submitted to the Republications Committee; that it had been rejected and was about to be returned when the agents of the legislative committee broke into the desk of David P. Berenberg of the school, seized it, and carted it away with the rest of the papers.

"These are the real facts, but for some reason best known to it, the committee permitted the witnesses to distort and misstate the facts," said Mrs. Mailly.

Mrs. Mailly also said that some evidence produced to show that the Soviet Russian Mission supplied the Rand School with the addresses of persons to whom to send literature and that a bill had been sent to the Soviet Bureau for the matter sent, and thus established a relation between the school and the Bolshevist Mission, had been put in with an intention to mislead.

"I charge," said Mrs. Mailly, "that Mr. Stevenson permitted the fact to go unnoted that the date of the bill was August, 1918, when the Soviet Bureau was not established until April, 1919. The pamphlets were sent out at the request of Mr. Converse when he was acting as representative of the Finnish Socialist Republic, which no longer exists, and before he was connected with the Soviet Bureau."

Mrs. Mailly said further that the evidence showing that A. A. Heller had secured counsel for the Rand School to fight a will case out West failed to show that Mr. Heller acted in the capacity of Director for the Rand School and not in his capacity as Commercial Director of the Soviet Bureau.

"While the Rand School is greatly outraged at the unwarranted assault upon it by the Lusk Committee and its alleged agents," she added, "and resents the Prussian and Czarist methods used in attempting to crush it, it proposes to present its side and state its case through the courts of the State when it becomes necessary, standing flatfootedly on the laws and Constitutions of the State of New York and the United States."

other prominent citizens. Since then Secret Service agents have been making a thorough canvass of the alien radical situation, and scores of other alien anarchists, Bolsheviki, I. W. W.'s, and other radicals are understood to be marked for deportation in the near future.

A study of the records of the men deported shows that many of them were smuggled into this country in the Spring and Summer of 1918, when Germany was making her final effort to win the war. In some instances the disturbers came in from Mexico, through the assistance, it is believed, of German agents.

The deportations are being made under authority of the law signed by President Wilson last October. This provides that "aliens who are anarchistic, aliens who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law, aliens who disbelieve in or are opposed to all forms of organized government, aliens who advocate or teach the assassination of public officials, aliens who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property," or aliens who belong to organizations which advocate or approve any of these crimes, shall be deported.

FRASER, DONALD, MacPHERSON; Scotch I. W. W. propagandist and agitator; deported to England on the steamship Baltic.

NEWLANDER, CARL WILLIAM; Swedish I. W. W. agitator, deported to Sweden on the United States.

It was pointed out yesterday by a Federal agent that this list contains the names of no Russians. More than a score of the principal Russian Bolshevist agitators in this country are under investigation, with their deportation in view. One presided at a recent Bolshevist conference in this city, and the papers in his case have been forwarded to Washington, marked "recommended for immediate deportation."

There is no more widely known Bolshevist propagandist in this country than this man. Among other agitators who may be deported are several writers for Russian-language Bolshevist papers published in this country.

Galleni was editor of the Boston paper known as Cronaca Sovversiva. He is a close friend of Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman. Emma Goldman and Berkman are in prison, and Berkman, who is not a citizen, will be deported when he is released from the penitentiary.

Martin, who was editor of El Corsario (The Pirate) of this city, was smuggled into this country from Mexico last Summer. He landed at New Orleans. He came at once to New York and began his agitation.

Nicieza came here shortly after this country entered the war, from Cuba, by way of Key West. Sanchez slipped over the Mexican border near El Paso, and the record shows he was one of the most active agitators that the Secret Service had to contend with during the war.

Schiavani was associate editor of the Cronaca Sovversiva, Newlander for a time was employed on Mother Earth, the anarchist paper of which Emma Goldman formerly was editor. Fernandez came into the country from Cuba. Garcia had been 16 years in this country when arrested. He admitted that he favored the destruction of the Government at Washington, and said he believed America should be governed in the Russian Bolshevist way. A letter written to Garcia by Newlander, while Newlander was on Ellis Island waiting deportation, was in part responsible for his arrest.

The I. W. W. agitators deported were among the most active aliens connected with that organization. Nearly all operated in the Far West.

The Federal authorities began an investigation yesterday of an appeal addressed to Russian revolutionists in America, issued from the offices of the Russian Bolshevist paper, the Novy Mir, last Friday. This is the paper with which Trotzky was connected when in this country. The appeal, as it appears, follows:

To All Organizations That Compose the Conference of Russian Socialist Organizations in New York and Vicinity:

Dear Comrades—The Conference of Revolutionary Socialist Organizations of New York City and Vicinity, discussing the question of issuing literature at its last business meeting, has resolved to appeal to all organizations which are represented in the conference to send immediately [illegible] for the publication of the second letter of Comrade Lenin to the workers in Europe and America, and for other literature.

The conference hopes that your organization, having discussed the question at your next business meeting, will immediately appropriate a certain sum for the publication of literature.

Comrades, the more means you will supply the more revolutionary propaganda we will be able to spread among the large proletarian masses. Do not put this off for some other time. Decide immediately and send material aid.

With fraternal greetings,

M. BIDERMAN, Conference Secretary.

The first letter of Lenin to workmen in this country and England was printed some weeks ago. Thousands of copies were circulated by Bolshevist agitators. When State agents, acting for the Legislative Investigating Committee, raided the offices of the Rand School of Science and of the "Left Wing" Socialist newspaper, The Communist, a week ago, they seized thousands of copies of the appeal.

PLAN TO FOIL "RED" PLOTS.

A conference of police chiefs from all the big cities which figured in the recent bomb outrages, about thirty-five in number, has been called for this morning, it became known last night. The place where the conference will be held has not been made public.

Representatives of the Department of Justice, Secret Service men, and members of other governmental agencies engaged in the bomb investigation will meet with the police officials for a full discussion on the anarchist situation. A plan of action will be decided on to keep up with all phases of the anarchist and bomb situation, and to prepare for any situation that may arise.

Systems for exchange of data and records will be adopted, and a plan to furnish information of the movements of known Reds will be put into use. In this way it is hoped that the police heads of the larger cities can be advised in advance of the intended visits of anarchists, so that they can be watched. Finger prints, Bertillon measurements, photographs, and prison records of anarchists now in jails will be furnished to all, along with the probable date of release.

With this data will be furnished also a list of all anarchist newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and other printed matter, so that an index can be maintained in each city. The recent bomb plot investigation has unearthed a great deal of important information, which also will be discussed.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL PASSED BY SENATE

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, the last of the regular supply measures, was passed by the Senate at midnight tonight at the end of a fourteen-hour session.

Two more measures aimed at anarchists, bomb throwers, and other enemies of law and order were included today in the bill. The sum at the disposal of the Department of Justice for detection of crimes was increased from $2,400,000 to $7,000,000, and a special fund of $500,000 for the Department of Labor to round up and deport alien anarchists was created.

The committee proposal for the creation of a budget commission to prepare and present a budget system was adopted. The committee will be composed of five Senate and five House members, the Secretary of the Treasury and two other members to be appointed by the President subject to Senate confirmation.

Senator Gronna, Republican, of North Dakota, attacked the budget theory as tending to "destroy democratic Government."

Reverting to the Senate's previous action in reducing the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission, Senator La Follette, Republican, of Wisconsin, declared there had been heard on the floor expression among Senators that this was a good time "to take a swipe at the commission and teach it not to go too far."

"The Federal Trade Commission is the best product of the Wilson Administration," said the Senator. "It has done some good, and the best thing it has done is its investigation of the packers' organization."

Testimony before the Senate Agricultural Committee as to the packers, he said, some day would be "thrown on a screen" for all people to see, but he added that the time had not yet come to show just what had been said there.

"I want law and order to prevail in this country," he said. "But, Senators, you can go too far."

The committee amendment appropriating $10,000,000 for Government acquisition of the Cape Cod Canal was stricken from the bill on a point of order by Senator King, Democrat, of Utah.

Controversy over continuing the United States Employment Service was settled by adoption, without debate, of an amendment appropriating $400,000 for the service. The House made no appropriation for the work and the Senate amendment was the result of private conferences between Senators and is subject to acceptance by the House. After more than six hours' debate the Senate voted 57 to 2 to reject the committee amendment to the sundry civil bill proposing to eliminate $200,000 provided for continuing the Tariff Commission. Senators Warren of Wyoming and Smoot of Utah voted for the amendment, which would have virtually abolished the commission.

UKRAINIAN REDS LOSE.

LONDON, June 28.—The anti-Bolshevist leaders in the Ukraine have been pushing successfully their campaign against the Soviet forces, according to a telegram received by the Ukrainian mission here. In the north General Petlura has advanced along the entire front and is within twenty miles of Kiev.

The forces under General Grigorieff, it is added, after occupying Odessa, Kherson, and Nikolaiev, are marching northward to establish communication with Petlura and beginning an offensive along the Dniester.

General Grigorieff, if the reports received in London are correct, has apparently gained greater success against the Bolsheviki than had been indicated recently, as the occupation of Odessa and the other cities mentioned places in his hands the most important ports on the Northwestern coast of the Black Sea. Grigorieff, formerly a Bolshevist leader, revolted with his army several months ago while in command at Odessa, and it has been uncertain whether he or the Bolsheviki were in control there.

SAILORS URGE RECOGNITION

Unlon Leaders Ask a Conference with Shipowners.

At a conference with representatives of seafaring men, R. B. Stevens, Commissioner of the Shipping Board, it became known last night, promised to give a definite answer by Tuesday to a request for a meeting of shipowners and the union officers. Those at the conference with Mr. Stevens were Andrew Furuseth, President of the International Seamen's Union; John H. Pruett, President of the American Association of Master Mates and Pilots, and T. L. Delahunty, Secretary and Business Manager of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association.

When the request was taken up with the shipowners in Washington, early this month, they said the proposition would have to be taken up with the American Steamship Association. Mr. Delahunty said yesterday that the owners had agreed to give them an answer June 23, but on that date said the question would be taken up with the different unions before general action would be taken. Last Thursday Furuseth sent a telegram to the Shipping Board asking that it and shipowners meet with the union men to discuss the question of employing American citizens first, and, secondly, those who were union members.

Delahunty said no reply had been received, and for that reason they had requested an answer from Mr. Stevens, who met the union leaders just before leaving for Boston. Delahunty said Mr. Stevens had agreed conditionally to certain requests made by the union representatives.

HATHAWAY'S

AT this time, when the price of good furniture is steadily increasing, we are particularly glad to be able to announce a complete line of bedroom and dining room suites and individual pieces. AMERICA'S TRIBUTE TO BRITISH SEAMEN

ADMIRAL SIMS APPROVES

Ambassador Davis Sends Letter of Hearty Commendation and Praise of Sailors in the War.

Announcement was made yesterday of the opening of the campaign for America's Tribute to British Merchant Seamen, which has for its object the raising of a large sum of money for the endowment of homes for disabled seamen, and to cement Anglo-American relations, and to bring to the attention of the people how important it is for the future that Great Britain and the United States stand firmly together as a bulwark of protection to civilization, liberty and progress.

National headquarters have been opened at 665 Fifth Avenue, and contributions may be made either in checks or securities. Joseph W. Reynolds is National Director and Francis H. Deane, formerly of the Liberty Loan organization, is National Secretary. Lieutenant Gerald C. Smith of the American Air Force, who trained with the British and who spent eleven months in service in England and France, receiving the Croix de Guerre and the D. F. C. decoration, will become a member of the organization as manager of the field bureau, and make speeches throughout the country.

Rear Admiral W. S. Sims, now stationed at Newport, who was commander of the United States Fleet in Europe during the war, has given his official approval to the project, by heading the American Committee. Charles H. Sabin and Justice Lewis L. Fawcett are also members of the committee. John W. Davis, Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, has indorsed the project as follows:

"I am deeply gratified to learn that a movement is on foot in America to raise funds for the endowment of the Convalescent Home at Limpsfield and for homes for aged and infirm British seamen and their wives.

"It is eminently proper that practical recognition should be given in this manner of the lasting debt which America and the civilized world owe to the men of the British mercantile marine for their gallant and heroic service to the allied cause. There is no more glorious page in the history of the war than that contributed by their bravery and self-sacrifice in the face of known and constant danger, all the more terrible because it could not be foreseen. They made it possible to transport the armies of Britain and the United States to France, and to provision them when there. They kept the commerce of the allied world alive and brought not alone munitions to the troops but food and fuel to the peoples of the Allied countries. They are the men who defied and defeated the base iniquity of the German submarine campaign, and it is not too much to say that without their brave devotion the war could not have been won.

"I wish you all success, therefore, in the laudable undertaking in which you are engaged, and congratulate you that it has been set on foot."

Admiral Sims said recently of the work of the merchant marine:

"Without the merchant seamen the army and navy would have been helpless. What the merchant marine did in the war will go down in history as one of the nation's greatest achievements."

Sir Edward Nicholl, R. N. R., M. P., and Admiral Lord Beresford have appointed William H. Appleton of the St. Regis Hotel Chairman of the American committee. Local committees are being appointed in all parts of the country. The homes which are to be opened for the benefit of infirm British seaman or dependents of seamen who have given their lives in service will also be open to American sailors who may fall on evil days in Great Britain. The movement will be internationally co-operative in scope, as England and Canada have also started similar campaigns. The fund raised in this country will be America's tribute.

$26,500,000 FOR 'PHONES.

Company Announces Plans to Catch Up with Improvements.

A program calling for the expenditure of $26,500,000 in improving the plants of the New York Telephone Company is well under way, it was announced yesterday. The scheduled improvements, some of them already effected, include new buildings, new switchboards, additions to present switchboards, new cable facilities, special conduits, and other equipment on a large scale.

"We are going ahead with our construction program just the same as we have done for the last twenty years," said F. H. Bethell, Vice President of the telephone company, when his attention was directed last night to a statement that nearly=$30,000,000 were being put into the corporation's properties. "It is in line with our policy of keeping the system up to date. You see, during the last few years, since the war started, we were unable to get either labor or materials for the construction work. Much of the materials used in telephone extension were used in great quantity for the war.

Some of the major items in the construction for this city include new central office buildings at Grand View Place and East 167th Street, the Bronx; 4,101 to 4,111 Fourteenth Street, Brooklyn; and 864 to 876 Liberty Avenue, Brooklyn. These buildings are nearing completion. Plans have been drawn and work will soon start on other buildings, the largest being at 227 to 243 East Thirtieth Street and 224 to 234 East Thirty-first Street, Manhattan; and in Tratman Avenue, between Zerega and Rowland Avenues, the Bronx.

Extensive additions will also be made to the Bowling Green, Rhinelander, St. Nicholas, and Astoria central office buildings. New central office switchboards are to be installed at Academy, Canal No. 2, Knickerbocker and Bayside exchanges and to the Metropolitan toll board. A number of specially built multiplex boards also are to be put into the system.

RESENT SENATE'S ATTITUDE

Representatives Say They Will Not Be Dictated To by Other Body.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—By unanimous vote today the House refused to act on a Senate resolution asking that the remarks of Representative Johnson, Democrat, of Kentucky, regarding the attitude of Senator Pomerene, Democrat, of Ohio, on District of Columbia rent profiteering be expunged from the Congressional Record. Later, however, it adopted a resolution deleting Mr. Johnson's address as violating the House rules.

In returning the Senate measure, the House declared in a resolution that the Senate request "itself involved a breach of privilege by declaring that language used by a member of the House is 'untrue.'"

Ex-Speaker Clark, the Democratic leader, said the House was willing "to treat the Senate courteously, but would not be dictated to."

TEETH ONLY CLUE TO SUITCASE SKELETON

WILL X-RAY UPPER JAW

The dismembered parts of a man's body that were found on Friday afternoon in a suitcase that had been stored for three and a half years in the baggage room of the Mills Hotel at Thirty-sixth Street and Seventh Avenue were the bones of a person who had been murdered, Dr. George Hohmann, a medical examiner, declared, after completing his investigation yesterday. The police found but slight clues to work upon, as time and lime spread over the face of the murdered man had obliterated all ordinary means of identification. Dr. Hohmann said:

"This is undoubtedly a murder, and not a student affair or the skeleton from a medical school or hospital. Examination shows a lack of the evidence of dissection."

The physician said the parts of the body in the case consisted of the head, which had been severed by sawing through at a point about the middle of the neck; the arms, which had been sawed and removed close to the shoulders, and the lower part of the legs, which had been disjointed at the knees and sawed off above the ankles. The trunk or body and the feet had apparently been disposed of in some other way by the murderer.

"The lime had eaten away the face until it is unrecognizable," said Dr. Hohmann. "A small patch of black hair, which the lime did not reach, shows on the lower part of the back of the skull, and it has been determined that the bones are those of a man because of a slight trace of mustache and beard. The murdered man was about 40 years old."

A metal disk stamped "Mills Hotel, No. 1095, Dec. 1, 1915," showed the date the bag had been placed in storage. The hotel management said the baggage had not been cleared out or disposed of as in the former annual rummage sales, because a number of the guests of the hotel had gone to the war, and their effects were permitted to accumulate for nearly four years.

Police Captain Arthur Carey of the Homicide Bureau found two sets of initials on the case—"N. A." and "A. W." There was also the end of an indecipherable label indicating that the bag had been sent at some time by express company or baggage car. But the best and only clue the police believe, which may lead to identification, is an upper bridgework in the teeth of the victim. Charts will be sent to the police of many cities in an effort to find the dentist who operated on the teeth.

HOLD THREE FOR ROBBERY.

Charged with having robbed Policeman Dominick F. Bligh of his watch and chain and $8 in cash, James Ryan and Antonio Gialorenso, both of 231 East Fifth Street, and Peter Scavetti of 282 Mott Street, were arraigned before Magistrate Frothingham in the Yorkville Court yesterday. Policeman Bligh testified that he was blackjacked on June 9 while waiting for a Long Island subway train. He was discharged from Bellevue Hospital yesterday morning. Ryan and Scavetti were held in $1,000 bonds and Gialorenso in $2,000 bonds for a further hearing on Tuesday.

The President states in his cablegram that he has been advised by the War Department that there are still a million men in the service under the emergency call. The figures given out at the War Department today give the number of men in the army on June 24 as 1,041,487. The War Department is anxious to have the strength of the regular army for 1920 fixed at 500,000 men. This would mean that approximately 500,000 men must yet be eliminated from the army before it will have been brought down to the new peacetime establishment, and that if the size of the regular army for 1920 is fixed at 400,000, 600,000 men would have to be dropped from the present army before it has been demobilized to the point where it reaches the new peacetime establishment.

From what could be gathered tonight it is the conservative opinion in high official circles that it would take from six to seven weeks to terminate demobilization, and that it will be toward the middle or end of August before the President, under the position he feels he is compelled under the law to take, would be able to regard demobilization as completed.

Plans of Republican leaders in Congress to keep Monday night until July 1 will prevent the House from considering legislation to enforce war-time and national prohibition in the opinion of Representative Volstead, Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, until late in the first week in July.

He spent today writing the majority report on the bill which will not be formally presented to the House until next Monday, when the Rules Committee will be asked to report a rule giving prohibition the right of way after the expected one week's recess.

Republican Leader Mondell informed those in charge of this legislation today that the Steering Committee could not agree to give prohibition right of way on next Monday, as the entire time of the House will be consumed in considering conference reports and supply bills which must be enacted by July 1. In the light of this statement and the announcement that an agreement had been reached for a week's recess, the advocates of prohibition notified their friends that the measure would not come up until after July 7, when every opportunity, after President Wilson returns, would be given for thorough debate.

Representative Dyer of Missouri, who will unite with three other members of the Judiciary Committee in making a minority report on wartime and national prohibition, in a statement today gives a number of objections which the minority would urge against the bill. There is no necessity for wartime prohibition, he asserts, because "the war is over, and his other chief objection is that Congress has no power under the constitutional amendment to define what is intoxicating.

Mr. Dyer's statement follows:

"I contend that Congress should not enact any regulations touching what is known as the War Prohibition act for the reason that the war is over and the said act has no force and effect, and that any effort to enforce said act will meet with failure in the courts, for the reasons stated above. I think this is true regardless of whether the President issues a proclamation declaring the act of Congress not to be necessary longer.

"I contend that Congress has no authority to say that every beverage containing one half of one per centum, or more of alcohol by volume is intoxicating. Every sensible person knows that that is not a fact. The constitutional amendment concerns the manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors, and it gives to Congress and the several States concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation. Under this amendment Congress has the right to make laws enforcing the amendment, but Congress has no right to interpret any of its provisions. The right to interpret rests with the courts. Of course, Congress has a right to define its own acts, but the prohibition amendment is not an act of Congress. Congress merely submitted the matter to the States. The amendment is now a part of the basic law from which Congress itself obtains its power.

"The majority of the members of the Judiciary Committee of the House concluded they had authority to interpret the word 'intoxicating' on the ground that the constitutional amendment for national prohibition was an act of Congress, but constitutional amendments are not acts of Congress. Congress merely submits amendments to the States. When three-fourths of the States ratify the amendment it becomes a law of the land, and is not in any way the same thing as a law passed in the usual way by the Congress.

"I think, therefore, that in the regulations pertaining to the constitutional amendment, intoxicating liquors cannot be legally defined by Congress, but must be left to the courts, and that whatever the Supreme Court of the United States finally decides in the matter will be the rule."

For the information of liquor dealers, and by way of fair warning, Assistant United States District Attorney Ben A. Matthews issued the following statement:

1. After June 30, 1919, the sale for beverage purposes of any distilled spirits except for export.

2. After June 30, 1919, the removal for beverage purposes distilled spirits held in bond except for export.

3. After May 1, 1919, the use of food products in the manufacture or production of beer, wine, or other intoxicating malt or vinous liquor for beverage purposes.

4. After June 30, 1919, the sale of beer, wine, or other intoxicating malt or vinous liquor for beverage purposes, except for export.

5. After November 21, 1918, the importation of distilled, malt, vinous, or other intoxicating liquors, except of shipments already then en route.

The act prescribes punishments for violations by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or fine not exceeding $1,000, or both.

The plan of the so-called High Flyers' Club to hold the greatest drinking carnival ever known in Madison Square Garden on the last day of open drinking was abandoned when the New York Life Insurance Company insisted on cancelling the lease for the affair, because of the advertisements in which it was described as a "wake" and a "baochanalian revel."

Along Broadway the news had a distressing effect. As the convivial already had begun their "last days on earth," as one of them put it, last night's crowds in the restaurants, cabarets, hotel bars, and other assembling places were looked upon as almost rivaling New Year's Eve. After the news became widespread the fun in some of the brilliantly lighted cafés grew faster and more boisterous.

At most of the hotels it was said the bars would be closed Tuesday. An example of the attitude of the hotel men was the expression of Copeland Townsend, proprietor of the Hotel Majestic, Central Park West and Seventy-second Street.

"We have intended from the beginning to obey the law scrupulously," he said. "Personally, I do not believe total prohibition is the right thing. But now that the last hope has gone, we shall accept the inevitable. The roof gardens will be hard hit, but most of them have arranged to serve soft drinks, and that and good music for dancing will do much to make people 'forget.'"

Mr. Townsend said he would open the latest department of his hotel—the "Bone Dry Room," Tuesday. He will have a soda fountain in the place the bar used to be, and the barkeepers will be back of the fountain trying to look as if nothing was missing. Many barkeepers have been looking up new situations for themselves.

BLOW TO LIQUOR MEN.

Dealers Caught Unprepared for the President's Stand.

News that President Wilson would not interfere to prevent the operation of the Wartime Prohibition act was a blow to liquor interests in this city, which had hoped the President might declare mobilization at an end after the signing of the Peace Treaty. Such a declaration automatically would have killed the law.

The hotel men were to have decided their course toward continuing the sale of beer and wine at a meeting tonight. The Society of Restaurateurs had called a meeting for tomorrow. The official announcement put an end to hopes of the liquor men based on whispered "inside information" as to the President's plans.

All hotel bars will be closed July 1, but the sale of "2.75 beer," on the theory that it is not intoxicating, will continue in some restaurants. Wine will be sold by some of the members of the Society of Restaurateurs to lay the ground for a test case, on the constitutionality of the War Prohibition act.

William H. Hirst, the lawyer who has advised the restaurant men that the War Prohibition Act is unconstitutional, but who urged them to sell only light wine and beer, which seemed to have the approval of the President in his message several weeks ago to Congress, had been hopeful that the President would intervene on the "beer" side.

"This announcement," Mr. Hirst said, "leaves us only one remedy—the courts. The situation is unchanged, except that we can hope for no relief from the President. If arrests are made Tuesday two questions will be raised: First, What is an 'intoxicating liquor?' Second, Is the War Prohibition act constitutional?"

William H. Anderson, Superintendent of the State Anti-Saloon League, made this comment:

"The President has taken the only consistent course that could be taken. Mobilization is not at an end, and the President would stultify himself if he declared it to be."

Mr. Anderson said members of the Anti-Saloon League would not act as inspectors or complainants in liquor cases, but would follow their previous course—agitating and stirring up public opinion—if they found officials lax in enforcing the law. Before hearing of the President's announcement, he had issued this statement:

The Anti-Saloon League is not at all worried over the situation, because no matter what happens it will help the prohibition movement. If the war prohibition law is generally observed, the benefits will be so apparent that the whole country will be reconciled to national prohibition before the amendment goes into effect. If the President abrogates the war prohibition law, it will help impress upon the moral element of the country that it must be alert and keep on the job. If war prohibition goes into effect, but is defied, that will help even more than the others, because it will arouse the people to a new realization of the inherently lawless character of the liquor traffic.

We shall assume that the officials intend to discharge their duties. The league does not intend to do anything now that will turn sympathy, temporarily, to "wets" and away from the prohibition cause.

While the league has stood for the War Prohibition act, that has been a mere incident. The greatest value we have got from the war prohibition proposition is the direct impetus that the attitude and tactics of the liquor interests, particularly the brewers, have given the permanent proposition. If the brewery interests had consented to allow war prohibition to go into effect early in the war, in all probability the amendment would not have been ratified by this time, even if it had been submitted. It was the resistance of the brewers to war prohibition in 1917 which hastened submission. It was the continued resistance that hurried ratification. Now, if the brewers turn in and nullify the War Prohibition act, that will clinch the enforcement of the amendment.

Under the circumstances anything that may be done by the brewers will help the prohibition cause, and the league will not do anything to prevent them and their saloon-keeping vassals from going as far as they like prior to Jan. 16. The meaner they are, the more fuss they kick up and the more disregard for law they show, the more certain becomes the enforcement of the amendment, the earlier the date when it will become a fully accomplished fact.

The liquor interests were kept excited yesterday by rumors that the President was about to intervene, that there would be no serious attempt to enforce the war prohibition act until enforcement legislation had been enacted, that legal discoveries would be made which would insure inaction by the Federal authorities, and that a big organization of raiders had been effected and after midnight Monday scenes from the life of Carrie Nation would be re-enacted all over the city.

Tens of thousands of people began yesterday to get an early start for the celebration of the wake of King Alcohol. There was large buying by individuals against the dry years. Many resolved to wait until Monday night, when they believed that saloons and dealers in danger of being stuck with unsalable liquor, might begin to slaughter prices.

Before the announcement by the President Federal officials seemed to be in doubt as to the Government's policy. The war prohibition act, while it contains penalties for violation of the act, creates no machinery for the police work of compelling execution of the law, and charges no existing department of Government with this function. While exemplary arrests are certain, it is not likely that the Government will be prepared by Tuesday to undertake a searching and thorough enforcement of the law.

REFUSES TO RESTRAIN DRY LAW

Rellstab Dismisses Plea — To Seek Injunction in Newark.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., June 28.—Judge Rellstab in the United States Court here today dismissed the application of William Dooner, West New York saloon keeper, to restrain the United States District Attorney from enforcing the wartime prohibition law. The court refused to entertain an application for a rule to show cause why the United States District Attorney should not enforce the law in question. Edward Hollander, New York lawyer, practicing in this State, and who made the application to Judge Rellstab, at once served notice on the court that he would make application in Newark Monday for an injunction to restrain enforcement of the National Prohibition law. The application will be made on the general broad grounds that the act is unconstitutional.

Judge Rellstab in dismissing the application for the order did so on the general ground and took the position that even the granting of a preliminary writ might create an impression that the court was impressed with the stability of the contention as raised.

BROOKLYN 'DRYS' PREPARE.

Asa F. Smith of 44 Court Street, Brooklyn, a member of the Kings County General Committee of the Prohibition Party, and at one time the candidate of that party for State Attorney General, said yesterday that if the Federal officers in Brooklyn, "charged with the duty" of enforcing wartime prohibition, failed to prosecute violators of the act, the "dry" forces in the borough would seek to have them "impeached."

"The Federal authorities charged with the enforcement of the Wartime Prohibition act should expect that the people will demand such enforcement," said Mr. Smith. "If these officers prove derelict in their duty, then they may expect the temperance forces to put in operation machinery which will force them to do what is demanded of them under our national laws. If they persist in their refusal to do their manifest duty then the voters, I believe, may be relied upon to replace them in office."

UP-STATE OFFICIALS NOT TO PROSECUTE

Corporation Counsels of Eight Cities Will Not Act Without Federal Instructions.

SYRACUSE, June 28.—Corporation counsels of eight cities, in session here today, reached a decision to make no effort to enforce wartime prohibition by any officer charged with the regular enforcement of the law unless the Federal Government issues definite instructions covering the method by which it is to be done. The legal advisers to the Mayors represented held in general that the police have no power to close any bar unless directed specifically by Federal authorities.

The meeting of Corporation Counsels was called by Mayor Stone, as President of the State Conference of Mayors. It was attended by W. P. Capes, Secretary of the Conference, and the legal advisers of Buffalo, Troy, Geneva, Rome, Beacon, Dunkirk and Utica. After the meeting the following statement was given out:

"The wartime prohibition law is a Federal law. The proper interpretation to be placed upon it cannot be stated until there has been an authoritative decision by the United States Courts, or, in the absence of such decision, a ruling by the United States Attorney General.

"Like all Federal law, the wartime prohibition law can be enforced only by the Federal authorities. It is clear that the cities cannot take the initiative in enforcement of the law.

"United States authorities are the proper officers to whom all complaints and reports of violations should be made.

"If the Federal authorities call upon the local governments for assistance in enforcement of the law, we recommend that such assistance be given."

CONTRAST TO CAVELL CASE.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, June 27.—The Germans, when they occupied Belgium, shot Edith Cavell because she aided in strengthening the English Army by assisting a few men to get back to it. They did not say they shot her because she helped wounded Englishmen to reach home.

Americans in occupied Germany caught a recruiting agent for the German Army at a time when it was possible that war would be resumed and these men used against our soldiers. He was acting in direct violation of the armistice agreement and with the full official sanction of the German Government. The Americans fined this man 5,000 marks and sent him to jail for six months.

The name of this man is Frederick Ketterman, and he is an officer in the German Army. He was caught in American territory bearing authority from the Landesjagrifleorps Headquarters in Münster to recruit for that organization. He had maps showing the recruits paths through the woods by which they could avoid the American sentries on the outskirts of Coblenz bridgehead, and thus get into unoccupied Germany. He had a full supply of enlistment blanks. He had passes entitling his recruits to reduced fare on German railroads.

There were also found on him reports to the German War Minister on the strength of the American forces. He had a copy of a report he made on the blowing up of the Mülheim ammunition dump, near Coblenz.

Not only was he recruiting illegally, but he was a spy. On trial he confessed that he had recruited and sent out of the Coblenz area more than fifty men.

Ketterman lives. Edith Cavell, who under the strictest interpretation of German military laws, committed only a tithe of offense of which this German is guilty, is dead.

WEATHER HALTS FLIGHT.

HARBOR GRACE, Newfoundland, June 28.—Yesterday's bright hopes of a getaway today came to naught and the members of the Handley-Page expedition resigned themselves once more to uncertainty and delay when today's weather reports showed that the conditions over the Atlantic had failed to improve in accordance with their expectations.

Not only are the conditions unfavorable, but the reports from the cable ships scattered for some distance from one another show most variable winds, together with general inclemency.

Masters of vessels generally reported here are losing interest in the transatlantic flying venture to the extent of failing to send in regular reports of meteorological conditions at sea and this apathy on their part is making it difficult to gather certain data. Tonight there is no prediction of a getaway date. Major Gran, navigator of the expedition, being inclined to return to Thursday's pessimistic prediction of another two-weeks wait and the other members of the crew being disinclined to hazard another guess.

TRIES DEATH LEAP FROM PALISADES

THEY BOTH WILL RECOVER

Mrs. Ida Ladwig, a widow of 613 Park Avenue, Hoboken, attempted suicide late yesterday afternoon by jumping from the crest of the Palisades at Weehawken. At the same time she sought to end the life of her six-year-old daughter, Hortense, for she made what she expected to be her death leap with the little girl in her arms. As a result of the 130 feet jump Mrs. Ludwig suffered a fracture of the left arm, but not a bone in the little girl's body was broken. Both mother and daughter, however, were badly cut and bruised. According to the doctors at the North Hudson Hospital they will recover.

Mrs. Ladwig, who is 43 years old, was about seven months ago discharged as cured from a sanitarium to which she had been committed because of mental trouble. It was said last night that for some time past she had given signs of a recurrence of her mental disorders. At the hospital it was said that she had become violently insane, and when asked why she had attempted to take her own and her daughter's life, she replied, "The spirits told me to take my little girl and jump from the bluff."

The place from which Mrs. Ladwig jumped is known as King's Bluff, and is directly opposite the West Shore terminal in Weehawken. When she jumped the woman was seen by several trainmen, who were the first to reach the place where she and her daughter landed. The reason they escaped death was because their fall was broken several times by contact with shrubbery.

CALLS POLICE OPPRESSORS.

Magistrate Holds Men Who Put Guards Into Healy's Restaurant.

Police Sergeants James Phelan and Peter Duffy of Inspector Dominick Henry's staff were held yesterday by Magistrate Francis X. McQuade, in West Side Court, in $500 bail each to await the action of the Grand Jury, under a charge of oppression made by Thomas Healy, a restaurant proprietor.

The complainant testified that since Nov. 13 last the two Sergeants had had six men stationed in his restaurant every night from 10 o'clock to 1 o'clock to watch for violations of the liquor law. One man, he said, stood guard at the entrance, one in the middle of the dining room, a third man on the second floor, two on the third floor, where the bar is located, and the sixth man on the fourth floor. At 1 o'clock the man in the dining room, a patrolman in uniform, would announce to the diners that they would have to leave. Mr. Healy said, and many of the diners who had already eaten would immediately obey the patrolman's instructions and depart without paying their checks.

Healy said that men of Inspector Henry's staff had made forty different charges of violation of the law against him, but that in each case he had been discharged.

In holding the defendants for the Grand Jury Magistrate McQuade said: "After hearing this testimony I can see nothing but a clear case of oppression. The Inspector had better stop it and take his men away or I will send that message to him myself."

When Inspector Henry was told later of what the Magistrate said he remarked:

"When that message comes we'll take care of it all right."

When asked whether he would have men stationed at the restaurant tonight the Inspector replied that he had nothing to say.

TEACHER MAY SLAP PUPILS.

Magistrate Says Instructor In Class Has Parents' Right.

A teacher has a right to slap a pupil in the face if the child is disobedient or unruly in the classroom, according to a ruling made yesterday by Magistrate Alfred E. Steers in the Flatbush Court in Brooklyn. The Magistrate dismissed a charge of assault made against Miss Frances Wilson, a teacher in Public School 42, at St. Marks and Classon Avenues.

The charge was made by Dominick Bernardo, 13 years old, of 1,038 Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn, who alleged that the teacher slapped him two or three times. Miss Wilson admitted that she had struck the boy on the face. She said her back was turned when a fight between two boys started, and she added that Dominick appeared to be the aggressor. She said she was forced to slap him several times to stop the fight.

"The law says that the teacher shall assume control of the children in the classroom," said Magistrate Steers. "The teacher takes the place of parent or guardian, and I am sure that no parent would be arrested when chastising a boy who had been disobedient."

HANSON TO INCREASE SEATTLE WAGES

STUDIES HIGH LIVING COST

Man Who Fought I. W. W. to a Finish Says It's Bad Business to Underpay.

By OLE HANSON.

By Telegraph to Editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SEATTLE, Wash., June 28.—As Mayor of Seattle, I ordered the Board of Public Works, who are the executive heads of the city department, to ascertain how much the cost of living has advanced since the signing of the armistice and to increase the wages of our 5,000 employes in proportion.

When I became Mayor fifteen months ago minimum wages were $3.50 for an eight-hour day. Living costs increased, and we increased wages from $3.50 to $4, and later from $4 to $4.50.

Upon my return from New York I made a careful investigation and found that, instead of stopping when the armistice was signed, every needful thing had continued climbing in price—rent, food, clothing, and all other necessities, except light, water, and street car fare, all of which are municipally owned and furnished at cost.

Our employes must and shall be paid enough to live in decency and comfort. It is neither good business nor good morals to underpay any one. The number of dollars one receives for work is not the true measure. The question is—how much flour, beef, beans, coal, shoes, &c., these dollars will purchase.

Ready-made men's suits sold for from $15 to $45 four years ago. These same suits, of poorer quality—and I take the word of the clothiers themselves—now sell for from $35 to $75.

Shoes that sold for $6 now sell for $15; houses and flats that rented for from $30 to $40 now rent for from $35 to $80.

I am informed that the wholesale price of clothing was increased from 10 to 20 per cent. in the last sixty days.

Seattle officials cannot regulate the cost of living. I do not know who can, but it is my plain duty to see to it that our employes receive sufficient to care for themselves and their families. Of course, raising wages generally will again shoot up the cost of production and make another raise necessary unless something happens or something is done. It looks as though we were all flies on a great wheel, powerless to stop and compelled to go on.

No concerted demand has been made by city employes, nor should employers wait until forced by threats of strikes, &c., to do justice to their employes. If the workmen are entitled to better wages and living condition give it to them without asking and without pressure. To hesitate in right doing gives every radical a text and every Red an argument.

Our workmen are not responsible for the increased cost of necessities and should not suffer because of it. Wages must continue going up as long as living costs rise. I wonder if the Federal Trade Commission has assembled the many reasons for this continuous increase? Have they done anything to check it? Is there any concerted movement in Washington?

If not, there ought to be. After the civil war, from 1864 to 1874, the prices of forty-eight needed commodities declined but 6 per cent. per annum, with just about an average decline each year.

Peace is now signed. Let us now give our best efforts to understand, if possible to solve, this great problem. When this problem is solved the greatest cause of unrest is wiped out.

OLE HANSON, Mayor.

HYLAN SAYS JUDGES SHOULD BE STERN

Writes Police Commissioner to Give Some Instructions to the Criminal Courts.

HE WOULD PUNISH CROOKS

Declares None Should Escape on Premise to be "Honest and Gentle"—Advises No Mistakes.

In a letter to Police Commissioner Enright, Mayor Hylan yesterday took exception to reports that undue leniency was shown criminals by the courts. The Commissioner is instructed to make a thorough investigation. If the Commissioner finds that criminals are being treated leniently, the Mayor suggests that he confer with the District Attorney and the Judges of General Sessions. The letter follows:

Richard E. Enright, Esq.,
Police Commissioner,
City of New York.

Dear Commissioner:

Your letter of June 20 calling my attention to the undue and mistaken leniency too frequently shown by the courts to desperate and confirmed criminals is before me.

Please make a report on the case of one Albert Winquist, a man of many aliases, who, after pleading guilty to grand larceny, was sentenced for ten years, and finally got off with a suspended sentence on his own guarantee that he would thereafter live a gentle and honest life, and who was later convicted for being a party to a daylight holdup and sentenced to ten years.

If your investigation discloses that this is a general abuse of leniency toward vicious criminals in the criminal court, I wish you would confer with the District Attorney and the Judges of the Court of General Sessions and see if it is not possible to have a stricter policy adopted for the future treatment of dangerous criminals. Confirmed criminals, especially strong arm men, should be thrown into jail as quickly as possible and kept there as long as possible. Leniency does not make crooks become honest, but it takes away their fear of being punished. The fact that paroling desperate crooks makes double and treble work for the police is only an incident.

We all know that no one should be arrested who has not violated the law, but I will go further and say that it would be better to let a dozen guilty escape arrest rather than that one innocent person should be humiliated and disgraced.

I notice with regret that there seems to be a disposition on the part of some of the Judges of the Court of General Sessions to blame the Police Department for cases of improper convictions coming before them on appeal from the Magistrates' judgment of conviction. These Judges surely know that these convictions for which they criticise the police are findings of the Magistrate. The blame for an improper conviction should be placed where it belongs. If the police make an improper arrest the Magistrate should dismiss the complaint, and should not convict the defendant, who is improperly arrested. The Magistrate should also notify the Police Commissioner of any improper arrests made by the police.

I wish to commend you for assigning police women to aid in policing localities frequented by women of questionable character.

Very truly yours, JOHN F. HYLAN.

The Mayor's letter to the Commissioner last week instructed him in crime prevention.

SEES HUNGER BACK OF GERMAN RIOTS

"Demoralization by Starvation" Exists in Germany, According to United States Army Officer.

NO LOVE FOR EX-KAISER

This, However, Is Due to Disgust at His Cowardice Rather Than Dislike of His Policies.

"Demoralization by starvation" is the condition existing among the Germans according to Captain Samuel Powers of the United States army who has just come back from Berlin after nearly five months' service there as a member of the Commission for the Repatriation of Prisoners. They have lost their mental stamina and their moral backbone to such a degree that they must express their pent-up feelings in rioting and disorder, and in cheering the speeches of both the Spartacides and the Reactionaries provided the speakers are rabid enough, says this officer.

Captain Powers represented the International Harvester Company in Berlin in 1915 and 1916 and thus had ample opportunity to study the Teutonic character before the debate as well as afterward. It is his opinion that the Germans' desperation at the lack of food cheap enough for the lower classes to obtain, the lack of work, and the general feeling of hopelessness resulting from a peace, the terms of which were much severer than they expected, has driven them to wild and reckless acts.

"The Germans are sick of the whole business," said Captain Powers yesterday. "They started a world holocaust, they are suffering from the results, and now they are anxious to get back to the old lines of communication and trade with other countries. They desire to live normally again. Their feeling toward President Wilson up to the time of the publishing of the treaty draft was most cordial. They had the impression the President was going to work for them, but when they learned that with his approval they were to receive their deserts they said that he was a traitor, and the cordiality swiftly turned to dislike. Not only did it direct itself toward the President, but toward the Americans in Berlin who appeared in uniform. It was common for the Germans to call 'Schwein' after them. In fact, Brockdorff-Rantzau sent a telegram to General Harries, in charge of the Commission, saying that the German Government would not be responsible for any harm that might come to the American officers and enlisted men. The Germans were bitter toward the French and hated the English from the beginning, but they thought the Americans were really their friends."

They have busied themselves with local troubles. The fights have been sanguinary. At one time 1,500 people were killed in three or four days, and the morgues were stacked with bodies. The soldiers used explosive bullets upon their own people. The people are cowed, whereas with the Allies the effect was only to stimulate them to greater action. One day when there was a lull in the action on the Alexander Platz, a number of women came out into the open to buy vegetables. An airplane circled around, and then swept the people in the square, descended to within 200 yards and dropped a bomb among them, killing a number of women and children.

Think Ex-Kaiser and Son Cowards.

"The present Government is not very different from the old. There is no reverence for the ex-Kaiser, but this is rather because he was a coward and ran away than because of any dislike of his policies when he was in power. He would have been revered if he had stuck to his job. The Crown Prince, too, has lost all favor. He is down and out. The story is told of his selling a silver fox automobile coat presented to him by a noble, because he had no money. Another is told of Prince Joachim, who was perfectly willing to travel second class on the railroads. These princes have an income of about 20,000 marks in these days, but with the present prices this is pretty small pickings. Hindenburg still has the admiration of the people as a great General and an honest man, but Ludendorff is discredited because of his too great political activity. He also has been held responsible for much of the ruthlessness of the war.

"The cost of living in Berlin is certainly high. Ham is 25 marks a pound; coffee 25 marks; tea 90 marks, and eggs 2 marks each. There is plenty of food if you have the money to buy it. Many of the Germans have, for they made tremendous profits during the war. There is nothing but paper money except for a few small coins. All the time I was in Germany the largest coin I saw was a 50 pfennig piece and I saw only three of them. On the other hand the presses are turning out reams of paper money. I was in the jeweler's one day getting my watch repaired when a German came in to buy a diamond brooch. In payment he offered a stack of bills. The jeweler took them, but he remarked that he was seriously considering closing up altogether, instead of handing out perfectly good diamonds for paper that would probably be worthless.

"The Germans are in the state of the boy with a new toy. They have a republic and they don't know what to do with it. They cannot work it. They have never had to think for themselves in politics, and now they don't know how. When a Spartacide addresses them on the street corner, they cheer. When a few minutes later a conservative talks to them, they cheer again. They do not know what they want. They have no leaders. And they can't get work or they do not want it. Some of them say, 'If I work I get 13 marks a day. If I don't work, I get 10 marks a day from the Government. Why should I work for 2 marks?'"

Captain Powers told how all the prisoners had been repatriated except about 600,000 Russians. The Americans, he said, had suffered little because of the generous supplies sent to them from America, but the commission found the Russians and Italians in a deplorable state of filth and dirt. They had received nothing from home. When the war with Russia was over an attempt was made to send the Russians home, but it was found that thousands upon thousands of them never reached their destination. Instead they died of starvation or cold. In one case, a trainload of them were held up by returning German prisoners, who killed most of them with machine guns and then turned the train the other way and came home.

WHITE WAITRESS KILLED BY NEGRO

Colored Dishwasher Shoots Girl Twice as She Is Serving Patron.

PANIC IN RESTAURANT

Policeman Overcomes Man, Who Gives Conflicting Reasons for Crime When Arrested.

While Irma Dale, a waitress, was serving a meal to a patron in a restaurant at 2,246 Broadway, near Eighty-first Street, last night, a negro employed there as a dish washer rushed out of the kitchen with a revolver and shot her dead. Policeman Albert Massoles, of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station, was just coming into the restaurant, and, before the negro could fire more than two shots, he threw him to the floor and took the pistol away from him.

Ambulance surgeons from the Knickerbocker Hospital said that the first shot fired by the negro had caused instant death, and pointed out that the second shot must have been fired while she was on the floor. Apparently she was not aware of the impending attack and was standing over a table taking the dishes from a tray when the first shot was fired. The tray fell upon her as she lay upon the floor.

Various stories of his motive were told by the negro when he was taken to the West Sixty-eighth Street station, where he said he was Charles Arthur of 16, West 136th Street. One was that the waitress had borrowed $150 from him and that she had failed to repay it. One was that she had failed to keep an engagementw hich he had attempted to force her to make. Another story was that she had resented some of his remarks and had called him a "nigger." Arthurs said he had drunk two pint bottles of whiskey during the evening.

A few minutes before the shooting the waitress complained to Samuel Crown, the manager, that the dishwasher was disrespectful. She made only one more trip to the kitchen and was serving the food she had picked up there when Arthurs came out with the revolver. Crown said he did not believe the negro's assertion that the girl had borrowed money. One of the theories advanced by Crown was that the dishwasher had misinterpreted some remarks made by the girl.

The restaurant was crowded with persons, and several were injured slightly in the rush for the door when the shooting began. Tables were tipped over, dishes were broken, and women became hysterical. It was several minutes before the police could restore order so that all could leave in an orderly manner through the door at the front. Arthurs was held on a charge of homicide.

TRIES SUICIDE FOR EFFECT.

But Police Arrive Instead of Tearful and Forgiving Fiancee.

Marcel Propper, who, according to first reports, fired a pistol at his head, missed and fainted, and was surprised at being still alive when revived, said yesterday in his cell in the Newark jail that he did not really intend to kill himself, but only wanted to frighten his fiancée, who at the last minute had refused to go with him to get a marriage license. Propper said that when he appeared at her home Thursday morning to take her to get the license, she announced that she could not marry him. He says he pleaded in vain and as a last resort went out and bought a pistol, and going into the alley in the rear of her house, fired. Then he waited for her to come out in alarm and forgive him. But he waited in vain, and instead the police came and he has been in jail ever since.

STOP 100 FROM SAILING.

Men of Various Nationalities Had Alleged Greek Passports.

A general round-up of foreign born men who have been leaving this port in large numbers on alleged false passports was begun yesterday when 100 Hungarians, Serbians and Roumanians were taken off the S. S. Rochambeau as she was about to sail from pier 57, North River, for Havre, France. Most of the aliens, regardless of nationality and the section where they have been living in this country, had alleged Greek passports supposed to have been signed by the Greek consulate of Norfolk, Va., according to the agents of the Industrial Commission.

The move followed an inquiry by the State Industrial Commission office, under the direction of Miss Marian K. Clark, which has been under way for several weeks. Miss Clark said her attention had been called to advertisements in foreign-language papers announcing that passports might be easily obtained through certain agencies.

Ten of the men who had been taken to the Barge Office, and who, it was expected, would be transferred to Ellis Island to be held as material witnesses, were later released on the ground that Miss Clark had no right to order their detention under the circumstances.

Upon turning over to the Customs Intelligence Office their jackets and baggage, those who had been detained were permitted to go, having pledged their word to Inspector Norwood that they would appear whenever their testimony might be required.

LONG COMMITTED SUICIDE.

SAYVILLE, L. I., June 28.—The body of William H. Long, who disappeared from the Ross Sanitarium in Brentwood on Wednesday morning, was found this afternoon in the woods near his home. A shotgun was found, fastened to a tree, and it is believed Long shot himself by pulling a string attached to the trigger.

He had been in poor health, following an attack of influenza last December. It is believed he walked from the sanitarium to the Long home in Sayville and obtained the gun while every one was out. The body was found by his sister.

URGES THE NEED OF IRISH SOLUTION

London Times Appeals to Lloyd George and Colonial Peace Delegates to Act at Once.

DOUBTS URGENCY IS KNOWN

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 27.—The Times in an editorial on the Irish problem suggests that Lloyd George and the delegates of the overseas dominions after the signing of the Peace Treaty at Versailles today "might well turn their thoughts to another settlement that is scarcely less urgent," the settlement of the Irish question.

"Though primarily and necessarily a British concern," says The Times, "it is international in the sense that it affects the relationship between the English and Irish nations and also the relations of the free self-governing communities of the British Commonwealth with each other. We doubt whether the British Government has yet turned its thoughts intensely and constructively to it. We are not sure that they understand as they should and must the urgency of settling it in a large and honest way, but hand with the utmost promptitude and good-will they will encounter insuperable obstacles in the work of national reconstruction and development that awaits them, and will find themselves hampered at every turn in their other activities at home and abroad.

"The settlement must be based upon the determination that under the British crown and within the framework of the British Commonwealth Ireland shall be her own mistress. We believe it the possibility not only of promoting Irish welfare under a rather generous system of Irish self-government, but also in the possibility of fostering reciprocal comprehension and good-feeling between the English and Irish nations, when the proof of English fairmindedness and friendship shall have removed from Irish minds the fog of suspicion and distrust that not altogether without reason beclouds their present vision."

The Times begins today the publication of a series of articles embodying a broad survey of the Irish problem written by "a competent and experienced Irishman, free from party ties or preoccupations." The first article says:

Says Sinn Fein Is Waning.

"There are good grounds for the belief that as a political force the Sinn Fein has passed its maximum, but it is still strong enough to secure the return of its candidates in practically all the seats it holds. The most sinister feature of the new movement is the tacit acceptance by the whole party of the excesses of its extreme members. It is symptomatic of a discontent so deep-seated that it distorts all clear vision and perverts all sane impulses. The events since the rebellion of 1916 have, however, unreasonably intensified anti-British feeling.

"The peasant of Galway, of Kerry, or claims of Ireland at the Peace Conference, and less for the ruling demand, is standing most effectively for liberty to Great Britain, and he votes solidly for the Sinn Fein, and so it is that the more extreme form of nationalism has spread in Ireland. It has spread from Ireland throughout the Irish race in the Dominions and in America. The Irish citizens of the Empire are caught by new terminology. They respond to the new note of self-reliance.

"In the United States the Irish-Americans, who once so strongly supported Redmond, have now transferred their allegiance to de Valera and the Irish Republic. This has a distinct reaction on Ireland. The Sinn Fein leaders appeal to Irish America for a confirmation of their policy. They are answered by sounding resolutions. Their Irish followers are well satisfied. Influences hostile to Great Britain work busily to fan the flames. The just vision of Americans becomes obscured and it is essential to the interest of British and American relations that the claims of Ireland so widely advertised in the United States shall forthwith be judged by Britain before the world.

"To Britain alone belongs that right, and that right implies a duty. Fatal to the settlement of the question, fatal to the sense of proportion, and of the facts, which nationalism must bring to any grave discussion of the future status of Ireland, is the idea that Britain will submit herself to external pressure, however friendly, on affairs of the United Kingdom."

A BATTLEFIELD SOUVENIR.

The best known battlefields, where the Americans participated, are reproduced in the luminous soft tones of roto-gravure—six pages of them in June 29 MID-WEEK PICTORIAL; each one is worth a frame. Published by The New York Times Company. On news stands, 10c.—Advt.

"SAFE AND SANE" FOURTH

A demand to make the Fourth again a safe and sane "FIFTH OF JULY" and to return to the national holiday a part of its original significance has been expressed by the Governors of many States, according to an announcement made in this city yesterday by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

"Many disastrous fires have been caused, it is said, yearly, despite warning against laxity in enforcing ordinances for the protection of life and property, and most cities and towns throughout the nation have arranged safe and sane fourth celebrations, community singing, and evening fireworks displays, under proper safeguards.

Governor P. W. Clement of Vermont, one of the many State Executives who pledged co-operation for a "safe and sane" holiday, wrote: "The war deprived the nation of too many of its stalwart citizens to risk injury or loss of life by return to a hazardous observation of the Fourth of July. The thrift of labor in homes and property should not be exposed to fire and destruction by the carelessness of others."

RED SOX WIN FIRST, YANKS TAKE SECOND

Crowd of 28,000 Rasps That Many Throats When Shawkey Fans Ruth in Crisis.

MAYS PITCHES BOTH GAMES

Thormahlen Allows Only Four Hits, Yet Loses Opener—Bodie Hits Homer Into Left Field Seats.

The good right arm of Bob Shawkey pulled the Yankees from the danger of a double defeat by the Boston Red Sox yesterday at the Polo Grounds, shattered the iron-man effort of Carl Mays, the Hub twirler, humiliated the mighty Babe Ruth, Boston's swatting all-around player, and threw 28,000 fans into a delirium of joy which, for expression, has perhaps never been surpassed in the shadow of Coogan's Bluff.

Shawkey came to the rescue of the Yankees in the seventh inning of the nightcap encounter. Ernie Shore, who started on the hill for Miller Huggins, gave unmistakable evidences of slipping, despite the nourishment of an early three-run advantage on his side of the ledger. Manager Huggins was quick to discern the danger, and signalled Shawkey from the right-field bull-pen.

Shore had been pounded for one run in this stanza, and Harry Hooper and Bobby Roth were aboard the sacks with the tying runs. Babe Ruth, who had been pounding the pill to his heart's content all afternoon, was striding leisurely to the plate.

Shawkey's warming-up exercises in right field were interrupted by a signal from Manager Huggins. The hero of eight straight victories this season walked in on the field and to the mound. Every hope beating in the breasts of the assembled multitude was placed expectantly on that sinewy right arm, as Bob steamed over his practice throws.

Three Futile Swings.

Ruth strode confidently to the plate. A double would tie the score, and one of Babe's copyrighted home runs would change the complexion of the game. Shawkey never trembled. He shot one at Babe, which was a little wide and went by for a ball. The next one Ruth swung at, and the next, and again the next. And the mighty Ruth, whose hitting prowess has struck terror to the heart of many a pitcher, had struck out on four pitched balls in the game's most crucial moment.

As if on a prearranged signal, pandemonium broke loose. Ruth's final healthy whiff at the precious horsehide was the release lever for a mighty demonstration. Like one man, the entire 28,000 recreation seekers rose on their feet in a bedlam which rocked the huge Brush Stadium and echoed and re-echoed across the big ball park. Hats were tossed high in the air, as were newspapers, programs, and everything else within reach which was not securely fastened, for, in that great demonstration, showered on the modest Shawkey, were the pent-up emotions of one of the season's biggest throngs, released when the crisis had passed.

Shawkey seemed not to mind the bedlam. He made Wally Schang hit into a force play on Roth, retiring the side, and then was greeted with another ovation as he picked his way to the dugout. In the closing two frames but six men faced the star Yankee hurler. Ruth, too, took the situation good-naturedly and didn't seem to begrudge Shawkey the plaudits which were showered upon him.

Shawkey's arrival on the scene stopped what threatened to be a productive Red Sox uprising and kept the Yankees in front in the score. They took the nightcap match by 4 to 1, after dropping the opener by 2 to 0.

Attempts Iron Man Stunt.

Carl Mays, Boston's husky right-hander, selected a man's sized afternoon's work for himself. Carl, after scoring a heart-breaking victory over our own Herb Thormahlen in the opener, elected to again subdue the Yankees in the second game. The Hub pitcher didn't get far in his calculations, however, for the Huggins clan, smarting under the humiliation of the first defeat, started early to manufacture runs. In the second game they made each early inning productive of at least one marker and didn't stop until they had amassed the formidable total of three. Then Mays became effective, but it didn't much matter, for his dream of a double triumph was blasted.

Long Ernie Shore drew the pitching assignment for the Yankees in the closing clash, and, backed with superb fielding, got along successfully until the dangerous eighth. Then Manager Huggins thought a change of twirlers would benefit Yankee prospects and at the same time retard the Hub outlook. And it did.

Duffy Lewis started the Yankees in the scoring column in the first inning of the second game. With one down, Peckinpaugh drew a pass, the first issued by Mays for the afternoon. Peck took second while Vitt was throwing out Baker, and then Lewis came along with a single to left on which Peck raced home.

In the second inning the Red Sox threatened, but were repulsed. Roth, the first man up, drew a pass and reached third when the mighty Ruth shot a single to right. Shore threw out Schang. On Scott's rap to Peckinpaugh Roth tried to score, but was chased up and down the third base line, Baker making the putout. Ruth took third and Scott second on the play, but Pratt threw out Shean for the third out.

Ping Hits for Circuit.

Ping Bodie gave the Yankees another marker in the second. After Pratt had lined to Mays, the redoubtable Ping busted one into the far reaches of the left field bleacher section and trotted around the corners while Mays and the remainder of the Red Sox looked on with unbelieving eyes.

J. Franklin Baker's big war club manufactured the third Yankee run in the third frame. Starting the inning Vick fanned and then Peckinpaugh beat out a hit to Vitt. Baker followed with a double which bounced off the right field wall and scored Peckinpaugh. The Trappe farmer, however, died trying to take third on a hit and run play that never started.

The Red Sox picked on Shore's delivery for two hits in the fourth, another in the fifth, and in the sixth had the bases crowded with two down on a brace of passes and a single by Scott. Nothing happened, however, for snappy plays averted the lurking disaster.

In Boston's riotous seventh Peckinpaugh threw out Gilhooley. Vitt singled to center, and Hooper drew a pass. Roth singled to centre, scoring Vitt, and placing Hooper on third. Then Shore was relieved, Shawkey came on the scene, the mighty Ruth fanned, and Roth was forced, ending the agony. Shawkey held the Red Sox under control in the closing two frames, when but six men faced him.

Hard Luck for Thormahlen.

Fate played Herb Thormahlen false in the opener, after the Yankee twirler had gone through seven innings with only twenty-one men facing him, and allowing only one hit, which was immediately discounted. Ruth got this solitary blow in the fifth, and died trying to steal. The Yankees couldn't do anything with Mays, although they were more successful in their stickwork than the Sox. In the seventh the Yankee outlook was bright, when the bases were crowded, with Ping Bodie at bat, but the hopes were dissipated when Ping, attempting a squeeze play, pop-bunted into a double play, which Mays made unassisted.

In the Red Sox eighth, with one down, Ruth ripped a double to the right field wall and Schang drew the first pass issued by Thormahlen. Scott singled through short to left, scoring Ruth and putting Schang on second. An attempt at the double steal resulted in Schang being killed off at third. Then Baker allowed Shean's grounder to pass uninterrupted through his hands and Scott scored from second with the Sox second run. Peckinpaugh, in returning the ball to the plate trying to head off Scott, threw wildly to Hannah and Shean reached second, but was marooned when Mays grounded out to Pipp.

GIANTS GAIN EVEN BREAK WITH BRAVES

Capture 14-Inning Struggle by Score of 5 to 3 After Losing First Game, 6 to 5.

BOSTON, Mass., June 28.—The Giants encountered stronger opposition from the Boston Braves here today than had been anticipated and the league leaders had to put in a long day's work to come out with an even break in the double header. They lost the first game by a score of 6 to 5 and had to battle fourteen innings in the second contest to gain a victory by a score of 5 to 3.

Fred Toney was hit hard in the opening game, and it was his loose pitching that accounted for the defeat of the Giants, although Arthur Fletcher made an error which let in the winning run. But the second game proved to be a better contest for pitchers. Jess Barnes was matched against Rudolph, and the two entered right into a mound duel from the start. Both pitched excellently, and the game was nip and tuck all the way.

Barnes was finally taken out in the ninth inning, so that McCarty could bat for him when it appeared that the Giants might gain a verdict, but they failed to do that, and Dubuc went in for the second time in the day. He held the Braves scoreless for the balance of the contest and the Giants finally made a pair of runs in the fourteenth with the aid of a bad throw by Rawlings, who replaced Maranville when the latter was put out of the game.

The Braves took the lead with a run in the second and gathered two more in the fifth and sixth. The Giants did not score until the fourth, but tied the score by bunching hits in the eighth and ninth.

Big Fred Toney, who had just come to be considered one of the real dependable hurlers on McGraw's staff, took the brunt of the defeat in the first game. Toney was very badly off form and was hit hard despite the fact that his teammates had spotted him to a fairly generous lead right at the start. But Toney seemed to lack control, and in his efforts to get the ball over he made his deliveries easy for the Boston batters.

However, an error by Arthur Fletcher at a critical moment in the seventh inning paved the way for the defeat after Toney had allowed the Braves to tie the score on him. Fletcher dropped a pop fly which on most occasions he would have gathered in without the least trouble. Maranville happened to be on third base with the winning run at the time, and he cantered home to win the game.

Arthur Nehf did much to win his own game. The Boston southpaw was in very fine fettle, and it was not altogether his fault that the Giants were able to roll up so many runs in the first inning. Nehf held the Giants to six hits, three of which were made in the opening frame. Maranville, who dropped a fly in the sun, paved the way for the good start the Giants made, and they took advantage of it by bunching their hits.

Burns and Fletcher were again the stars at the bat for the Giants, each getting two hits. It was a triple by Fletcher that sent home the first two runs, and he later brought in another himself.

Burns opened the first inning with a pop fly. The ball got in the path of the sun and Maranville lost it completely, allowing it to drop safely for a hit. Young followed with a double, which sent Burns to third, and Fletcher then inserted his triple, which scored both men. Fletcher tallied while Doyle was being retired.

In the Boston half of the first Powell was safe on an error by Zimmerman, stole second and scored on a single by Cruise. In the fourth Boeckel singled and Nehf sent him home with a three-base smash. In the fifth the Braves went into the lead when Herzog walked and finally scored on a double by Cruise and an error by Zimmerman.

A single by Burns, a sacrifice by Young, Fletcher's out, and a single by Doyle accounted for the pair of markers. In the seventh Holke opened for the Braves with a single. Maranville doubled, sending him home. This marked the exit of Toney and Dubuc went to the box. Fletcher then muffed a fly from Wilson and Maranville scored.

PHILLIES DROP TWO TO ROBINSON'S MEN

Dodgers Blank Opponents in Pitchers' Battle and Then Wallop Them in Hitfest.

Shutting out the Phillies, 2 to 0, did not quench Brooklyn's thirst for victory yesterday, as the Dodgers proceeded to pound out eleven hits in the second contest of the dual bill and to win the final encounter by 6 to 3.

The first game was a pitching battle between Cadore and Rixey, each allowing only three hits; but the clouts of the Dodgers came at opportune moments, while the Phillies failed to deliver when men were waiting at base stations for tickets home. A crowd of more than 10,000 persons gathered for the bargain day proceedings.

The Robins opened the day's celebration by getting a run in the first inning. Olson lifted a little fly to Pearce, but Johnston drove out a double to deep left and scampered home when Wheat dropped a hit over second. Further chance to score was killed by Luderus, who made a pretty stab for Myers's liner.

The second run came in the third as the result of a single and a fly, which was dropped. Olson cracked a hit through second, and made a circle of the bases when Wheat lifted a high fly to deep first, which Pearce got under but missed.

Luderus made the first hit off Cadore in the fifth, when he rapped out a single, but he was forced at second on an infield rap by Baird. Again in the eighth the Phillies made an attempt to avert a shutout. Sicking made a clean hit through third. The rally terminated right there, for Cady hit to Olson, who hopped a few feet to the keystone sack, and then tossed the ball to first, completing the double play.

Myers opened the ninth inning with a long fly to Callahan, who made a beautiful running catch in right centre. Pearce grounded out, and Meusel singled over second. Cravath's bat failed to contain the necessary punch, and he knocked a cute infield fly, which was safely pocketed by Olson.

Rixey pitched good ball, fanning seven Dodgers, but his mates were unable to produce the necessary punch. Cadore struck out one and each moundsman gave two walks.

Jacobs was the pitching choice for the Phillies in the second game, with Clarke working behind the bat. Robinson sent Mamaux to the mound for the Dodgers, with Miller doing the receiving.

Beginning in the second inning, Brooklyn began its hitting campaign, when Myers sent a scorcher down the first base line, which landed him on second. Konetchy hit to Jacobs, who tossed the big first sacker out at his own station, and Myers advanced to third. Ward reached first on a pretty bunt along the third base line, which was juggled by Baird, and Myers scored.

Coming back in the next inning, the Dodgers garnered another run. Johnston hit to Sicking, who made a bad throw to first, and the Brooklyn second baseman advanced to second. Griffith was safe when Cravath found his fly unworthy of proper attention, and Johnston romped home.

Myers started the scoring again in the fourth, when he scampered down to first, beating out an infield hit, and moved over to second when Konetchy followed suit. Ward advanced both runners on his sacrifice, and when Miller sent a two-base whizzer along the third base line, both men scored.

Philadelphia began to show that she had not forgotten where the home plate was situated when Baird reached first on an infield hit, got to second on Sicking's out, and reached home on a double by Clarke.

Finding that the Dodgers could be scored on, the Phillies came back in the sixth, with two more runs. Pearce drew a walk, and Meusel singled to right field, Pearce stopping at second. Cravath forced Meusel, and Pearce reached third, within sight of the goal. Luderus took three futile strikes, but Baird singled to right and Pearce came home, Cravath stopping at third. Baird grew playful around first base, and on the run-up which followed in catching him Cravath came home. Baird was put out with the assistance of the whole infield.

After this spurt the Phillies died away. Brooklyn, however, added another run in the sixth, when Konetchy singled, advanced on Ward's sacrifice, and scored on Mamaux single. Myers's double to centre, followed by Konetchy's double, scored the final run in the eighth.

PLAN NEW DIVISION OF SERIES MONEY

System of Including All First Division Clubs in Distribution Will Be Abandoned.

The club owners and players of the two major leagues are now considering a new plan for the division of the world's series receipts in the Fall, and it is expected that the National Commission will adopt the new plan within the next few weeks. Last year's scheme of permitting the first four clubs to share in the receipts was only an experiment, and although favored by several National League club owners, it is likely to be abandoned. It was the idea of John K. Tener, former President of the National League, to give this plan a one year's trial. As it did not prove satisfactory, the leagues will now try a new plan.

The American League has gone on record as favoring a return to the old conditions governing the series, that the entire sum allowed for the players go to the members of the two competing clubs in the classic. The National League favors a curtailment of the share for the members of the competing clubs, so the result will probably be a compromise.

The plan, which is likely to meet the approval of the club owners and players of both leagues, provides that the players' pool—consisting of about 60 per cent. of the receipts of the first four games—will be split so that 75 per cent. of this pool shall go to the players of the two contesting clubs, while the remaining 25 per cent. will go to the members of the clubs finishing in second and third places in the pennant races in their respective leagues.

As the receipts of the world's series this Fall promise to be larger than ever before in the history of baseball, the officials of both leagues favor a curtailment of the amount which should go to the members of the contesting clubs. The price of the tickets was cut last Fall to meet war conditions, but the National Commission has already decided to re-establish the scale of prices which governed the big series. Under the new plan, the officials figure that the members of the winning club will receive close to $3,000 each, while the members of the losing club will get in the neighborhood of $2,000.

The greatest total receipts ever taken in at the world's series was in 1912, when the Giants played the Boston Red Sox. This series of eight games drew a total gate of $490,449, and the players' share was $147,572.28. This was not the largest players' pool, however, because in 1916, when the Red Sox defeated the Brooklyn club, the players share reached $152,888.58, which is the record of the classic. The players' share in this series reached such a high figure because of the unusually large crowds at the games played at Braves Field in Boston. There was an attendance of 41,373 paid admissions in the second game, while in the fifth game of that series, a record figure for attendance at a world's series contest was established, 42,620 spectators seeing the game. The players, however, did not share in this game.

Up to that time, the record attendance at the series was at the opening game between the Giants and Athletics at the Polo Grounds in 1911. At that game 38,281 spectators paid to see the game. While there have been large crowds in the Polo Grounds at Army-Navy football contests, this 1911 figure is the largest attendance that has ever been officially reported in the Bush Stadium.

After the division of the big pool between the Brooklyns and the Red Sox in 1916 baseball officials decided that the series had grown to such great proportions that changes should be made to meet the new conditions. The experiment made last season was not successful because, on account of the war, the series did not come up to normal conditions. If it had, however, it is doubtful if the experiment would have met with the approval of the players.

The plan to give 75 per cent of the players' pool to the winning and losing clubs in the series and the remaining 25 per cent. to the clubs finishing in second and third places will furnish the necessary inducement to keep the clubs fighting right up to the end of the season. In former years interest in the race fell off just as soon as a club had clinched the pennant. The second and third clubs are included in the split of the pool to stimulate interest right up to the end.

In each league this year the pennant race is closer than it has been in many years, and there is every indication that the close competition will hold right up to the end of the season. With the renewed interest in the game, which is shown by the record attendances on both circuits this season, the world's series this year is sure to result in the greatest attraction in the history of baseball.

The remarkable growth of the world's series can easily be seen by a comparison of the figures of the first clash between the National and American Leagues in 1903 and the series of the present day. The total attendance of the Boston-Pittsburgh series in 1903 was 100,429 for eight games, which was an average of only 12,553 a game. In the last big series played, that between the Giants and Chicago White Sox in 1917, the total attendance for six games was 186,654, or an average of 31,109 a game.

At least three or four clubs in each league are pretty sure to figure in the pennant races this year, and notable contests are looked for on both circuits. In the American League, the Yankees, Chicago White Sox, Cleveland Indians, and Boston or Detroit are sure to figure in the race right up to the finish, and in the older league the Giants, Cincinnati, Chicago Cubs and Pittsburgh, and perhaps St. Louis, give promise of engaging in a spirited battle right up to the close of the season.

Peckinpaugh and Cravath Are Leading Major League Batsmen

Yankee Shortstop Displaces Ty Cobb and Now Holds Big League Lead—Robins First Team to Make 500 Hits.

Roger Peckinpaugh of the Yankees is the leading hitter in the American League, with a batting mark of .395 for his forty-three games. During the last week Peck has displaced Ty Cobb as batting leader, and, incidentally, ran his latest hitting streak up to fourteen consecutive games. Peck also is showing the way in run getting with a total of forty-one to his credit, twelve of these coming in his last nine games. Buck Weaver of the White Sox has poled the greatest number of hits, 68, and Doc Johnston of the Cleveland Indians is leading the base runners with seventeen thefts.

Herb Thormahlen of the Yankees has the best winning percentage among the American League pitchers, with seven victories and only one defeat. However, Eddie Cicotte of the White Sox tops all major league pitchers in games won, with twelve to date, and Bob Shawkey of the Yankees ranks second with eleven.

During the week Ernie Shore stopped Babe Ruth's hitting streak, which had extended through fourteen games, and Herb Pennock stopped Clyde Milan after the latter had batted safely in [illegible] games.

In the National League the veteran Gavvy Cravath continues to show the way to all other hitters, as he has been doing since the season opened. Gavvy holds a batting mark of [illegible]. He leads his league in doubles with sixteen and home runs with eight, and the Old Man from Philadelphia is quite a leader. Ivy Olson of the Brooklyn club leads in run getting with 36 and he has made the most hits to date, 73. Bigbee of the Pirates leads in stolen bases with 18. Causey of the Giants and Eller of the Reds lead the pitchers, each having nine victories and three defeats.

To the Brooklyn club goes the honor of being the first to make 500 hits this season. Uncle Robbie's boys reached this mark in the second game of Tuesday's double-header with the Giants.

Tommy Griffith of the Robins is the fourth National League batsman to make five hits in a game this season. Hy Myers, Zach Wheat, and Benny Kauff are the others. Griffith got his five against Jess Barnes, the collection consisting of a home run, a double, and three singles.

The following figures include all games played on Thursday, June 26:

INTERNATIONAL RECORDS.

See of Rochester Displaces Kelly as Leading Batsman.

Bill See of the Rochester club is now the leading batsman of the International League, having displaced his team-mate, George Kelly, during the past week. See has a mark of .396 and Kelly is close behind with .385. Fred Maisel of the Baltimore Orioles has made the greatest number of hits, 83, and he also is leading the league in runs scored, with 59. Otis Lawry of the Orioles heads the base runners, with 26 steals.

George Kelly of the Rochester Hustlers made baseball history and sent the dopesters scurrying through the records when Lanky George shot four home runs and a double off Pitcher Barnhardt's shoots during the game played June 24. The quartet of four-baggers ran up Kel's home run total to 12 for the present year.

Kelly's remarkable batting feat outshines the record set years ago by that pair of wonder sluggers, Bob Lowe of the Bostons and Ed Delehanty of the Phillies. Lowe, in the closing game, played May 30, 1894, hit four round trips and a one-bagger off Ed. Chamberlain, Big Del repeating the stunt off Adonis Terry of the Cubs on July 13, 1896, at Chicago.

CANADIANS BEAT U. S. TEAM.

Win Baseball Game by 2 to 1 in Pershing Stadium.

PERSHING STADIUM, France, June 27, (Associated Press.)—Canada defeated America at baseball today by a score of 2 to 1. This contest was the only event at the stadium. It was a well-played game, and was heartily cheered by soldiers and sailors.

The Canadian victory was largely due to the pitching of Ernie Tate of Port Huron, Mich. On the Canadian team were two other Americans, Captain Jack Edis of Philadelphia, and Gilpatrick of Orono, Me. Canada scored both runs in the last of the fourth. The American score came in the seventh.

Taylor, the pitcher for the Americans, held the Canadians safe with the exception of the fourth inning.

CURVES AND BINGLES

Roger Peckinpaugh has tied his own American League record of hitting safely in sixteen successive games and is now out to beat the National League mark of eighteen games, held by Southworth of Pittsburgh.

Peck's blow in the opener gave him a hit in his fifteenth game and in the second game he got a single in the third inning which brought him even with the American League mark. Peck's career of hitting in straight games was interrupted June 5, this season, by Eddie Cicotte, the White Sox hurler, after the Yankee shortstop had chalked up blows for sixteen games.

Ruth's failure can be compared to the downfall of the Hindenburg Line when the allied assault got up full steam. He just crumpled, that's all.

Manager Barrow tried some diamond strategy between games. He had George Dumont warm up as if in preparation for the second clash, and then, at the last minute, Mays rushed out of the dugout in time to show three balls before the game was started.

The Yanks were out to discomfit Mays, and at the same time keep at the top of the ladder. And they did both.

Mays kept them kind of close to Truck Hannah's dome in the second inning. He came near decapitating the lumbering backstop. In the third, when Mays grounded out, Truck gave Carl an earful about the fate of pitchers who take liberties with people's skulls.

When Ruth misses a swipe at the ball the stands quiver. When he foul-tips one, Babe looks at his bat and then the ball. He can't seem to get it into his head that the great must miss like the lowly, sometimes.

Bobby Roth, playing his first game as a Red Sock, robbed Baker of an extra base hit in the ninth inning of the opener and drove Vitt home with the only Hub run in the nightcap.

Shannon, who was traded for Roth, didn't get into the mêlée. He worked on the bench.

PITTSBURGH, June 28.—Effective pitching by Sallee enabled Cincinnati to win from Pittsburgh today, 3 to 0. GREATEST CROWD IN THE HISTORY OF THE RING IS LIKELY TO SEE WILLARD FIGHT DEMPSEY

Vast Arena at Toledo Specially Constructed for the 80,000 Spectators Who Are Expected to See the Willard-Dempsey Fight

WILLARD'S REACH 83¼ INCHES

DEMPSEY'S REACH 78 INCHES

FIGHT WILL SMASH ALL RING RECORDS

PRICES FROM $10 TO $60

Boxers Will Receive Greatest Money Prize Ever Awarded in Long History of the Sport.

Special to The New York Times.

TOLEDO, Ohio, June 28.—When Jess Willard steps into the ring at Bayview Park on Friday afternoon to defend his title of heavyweight champion of the world against Jack Dempsey, all records in the history of the prize ring will be shattered. It will be the first time in the history of the ring that the heavyweight title will be at stake in a short twelve-round contest. The fight will be held in a wooden amphitheatre, which will surpass the seating capacity of the Yale Bowl. It is expected that a crowd of 80,000 spectators will see the bout, and with the price of seats ranging from $10 to $60, the gate receipts are expected to reach the million mark.

The promoter of the battle is Tex Rickard, the soldier of fortune who has been taking long chances throughout his adventurous career and coming out on the long end. The referee of the bout is Ollie Pecord, an old-time ball player and boxer known only through the Middle West, but the veteran of 400 bouts. An innovation in the boxing game in this country will be tried at this fight, when two judges will sit at the ringside, as is the custom in amateur boxing bouts. These judges will be A. J. Drexel Biddle and Rickard. The timer will be the former amateur heavyweight champion, Warren Barbour of New York, and the alternate referee is Jack Skelly, the old-time boxer of Yonkers.

Greatest Money Prize.

Never before in the history of the ring have boxers been guaranteed so much for their appearance in the ring. Willard, the title holder, will get $100,000 for his thirty-six minutes of fighting, while Dempsey will get $27,000 for his part in the affair.

Far different from the sporting events of the old-time prize ring, the heavyweight battle has developed into a monstrous business venture. From far back in the stone age, combat at fisticuffs has never failed to stir the virility and interest of men. The art of self defense, the high development of battering down the blow dealt with the skilful use of the fist, has never failed to stir the enthusiasm of men of red blood. Back of the highest development of refinement and culture there still lurks the primitive thrill when highly trained fighters clash for supremacy.

Around the ring in the great wooden octagon where the fight is to be held will be men of all walks of life in this country. Members of Congress will rub elbows with the unemployed sons of chance. Laborers and jurists, professional men, captains of industry will make up this great gathering, together with the largest number of women that has ever witnessed a ring contest.

The seats in the boxes which make up the charmed circle about the ring will cost $60 each. Just back of this circle will be another cluster of boxes where the seats will be $50. Then comes the inner circle, where the seats cost $25 and $30. The outer circle of this section is provided with $20 seats. Seats in the reserved bleachers, half way up the wooden embankment, will cost $15, while the rush seats, a vast number of benches perched high on the upper edges of the spacious wooden arena, will cost $10.

Many Reserved Seats Sold.

The greater part of the reserved seats have been taken up. Still there are thousands of seats to be sold and the promoters are figuring on a last minute rush on Friday for the low priced seats. The arena is situated in a vast open space where the sun will beat down relentlessly on fighters and spectators. An all-day boxing show has been provided for those who expect to come early and avoid the rush. The boxing bouts will start at 10 o'clock in the morning, and will continue right up to the time of the big fight, which is scheduled to start at 3 o'clock, but which probably will not get under way until a later hour.

The city of Toledo, with its great railroad facilities and numerous hotels, has given itself over completely to this ring match, which promises to be the greatest event of its kind ever staged. No one expects that the city will be able to accommodate the crowds with comfort, but Toledo are willing to be inconvenienced on an occasion of this sort. All hotel accommodations are taken for July 2, 3, and 4, and the Hotel Men's Association has sent out notices for all business and pleasure travelers to avoid Toledo on these days. Everybody is warned to keep away unless they are coming to witness the fight.

A few years ago, no one would ever dream that any city in this country would have developed the broad point of view which permits this greatest of ring contests. World's events have instilled a spirit of right in mankind in general such as never has been known before. The war has taught the lesson that, after all, it is a good thing for men to know how to fight, and to encourage fighting of the skilful sort developed by the two men who will step into the ring on Independence Day.

Willard Will Be Ready.

While opinions may differ on the subject, Jess Willard will go into the ring prepared to do battle in first-class condition. Looking at the two men, first observation would indicate that the challenger, Dempsey, was in far better condition for the fight than the Pottawatomie hercules. This early impression is not altogether accurate, however. In the most perfect condition possible, a man of Willard's gigantic proportions would not look as fit as a normal sized man. No matter how finely he was drawn, Willard would look oversized. Compared with the finely tuned Dempsey, Willard naturally looks big and soft. But he has looked that way in all his fights. Willard is so massive that he appears slow on his feet. He is slow, but he more than makes up for that with a defence which has stamped him the fastest man with his hands of any heavyweight of recent years. He not only has highly trained ability of defence with hands and arms, but he can shift his long body with remarkable ease. When Willard pulls his head back or to one side quickly he is completely out of range of a man of Dempsey's reach.

Willard is a different type of fighter than the heavyweight division has ever known. He has always been an open-air man. A cowboy and a farmer, he has led the healthiest kind of a life. Thirty-six years of life in the great out-of-doors conserves a man's energy and strength. Willard has never dissipated, and in that fact alone he is different from the general run of fighters.

Willard knows himself so well that he doesn't throw himself on the advice of trainers. He has conditioners to help him in his work. Willard has confided to his close friends that he has been preparing for this fight long before he came to Toledo. He has trained differently than other fighters.

He has worked himself up to his present conditions through long, easy stages. Willard has followed the English system of training. The accepted plan of training a man for a fight in this country has always been to drop everything else and put in a hard period of intensive training. This Willard has not done. He is a man 36 or more years old, and intensive training would probably injure him more than it would help him. Long ago he started to train and take light exercise. Very slowly and gradually he has come down to about 248 pounds, and this is the weight at which he will probably enter the ring. When Willard fought Johnson for the championship at Havana he weighed close to 250. When he fought Moran in New York he was about 260.

Willard is a massive bulk of a man who cannot be judged by the accepted standards of proportion. His long left arm, constantly shooting in and out like a piston rod, is unlike any other that battled as great a boxer as Jack Johnson. Willard's massiveness does not impress the observer in the same way that the striking power of Jeffries did. He is so well proportioned for a big man that he looks as if he was built all up and down through the use of the commonly marred for such a big man. Pooch Donovan, the veteran Harvard trainer, who looked over the champion last week, said that the only thing which struck him about Willard as being out of proportion was his legs. Donovan ventured the opinion that the champion's under pinning was perhaps a little too light for the rest of his body.

Willard Good-Natured.

Tremendous reserve power lurks everywhere in Willard's frame. Only occasionally does he show it. Normally of a good-natured boyish disposition, Willard is not aroused easily. His power sleeps. It requires punishment and the heat and exhilaration of battle to bring him out of his apparent lethargy. The lightning jabs and stinging smashes of Jack Johnson did not wake up the Pottawatomie mauler for many rounds in Havana. Willard bided his time in that fight and once aroused there was no stopping him.

The ring sharps who figure Dempsey to batter down the champion in this fight say that the outstanding things which are against the champion are his age and his wind. As far as age is concerned, there has never been a heavyweight fighter who has been as strong at his age for the simple reason that none of them has ever led the same simple, clean life as Willard. As for his wind, twelve rounds of boxing should not be a difficult test for a fighter of his great stamina. The easy going method which Willard shows in his training bouts at the casino camp does not show the real Willard. In these bouts with his sparring partners he is constantly under a pull, and he works with his mouth open. The real Willard to championship form shows an entirely different facial expression. The mouth and jaws are hard set and the glint of battle sparkles in the eyes, where there is only a kindly smile when the massive fighter is at play.

Willard's style of boxing, which has shown against his sparring partners here, is left jabbing and right crossing, together with the short savage uppercut which he evidently plans to use as the aggressive Dempsey comes tearing in. Bulldog-like, Willard is a terrifically hard hitter. In fact, he can hit so hard that he has been afraid of his own strength. The right cross is not a forearm affair, but comes packed with all the power of his right shoulders. It's a man-killer, is this right-cross wallop of Willard's.

Dempsey Has the Punch.

There is also much to be said in Dempsey's favor. A hard smasher with both hands, a borer in a fighter who jumps at his man like a wildcat at the clang of the bell, Willard is going to meet a fiery concentrated attack the like of which he has never met in his ring career. The fight is of such short duration that Dempsey knows that if he is to win, he must win quickly.

Dempsey's training has been of the intensive sort. Working up to his present condition he has gone through a period of hard work which saps energy. As he stands today Jack Dempsey looks like a Greek god done in bronze. The muscle-knotted shoulders and arms have been burned to a rich brown by the sun. His waist is as graceful as that of a ballet dancer. The trim, lithe limbs are bursting forth with muscle. There doesn't seem to be an ounce of surplus flesh on his athletic frame. Keyed to this high pitch of condition, the question arises as to whether Dempsey will be able to hold it until he goes into the ring Friday. It is no easy thing to bring a man up to the highest point of physical condition as Trainer Jimmy Deforest has done with Dempsey and hold him there. A few weeks ago Dempsey was nearly on edge and was compelled to take a lay off. This lay-off, forced by a bad cut over the right eye, was a blessing in disguise, for Dempsey was forced to slow up, and he is again in superb condition.

A real knocker-out is Jack Dempsey. He is a one-punch terror. That one quick rush at the start in which he has battered down all opposition has carried him to victory in most of his fights. And yet when he twice fought Billy Miske these rushes didn't have the desired effect on the St. Paul fighter.

Dempsey is as quick as a cat. He is never still. His style is shifty and elusive, and he is always prepared to dig in with either fist. Remarkably fast for a heavyweight, Dempsey is going to keep Willard busier in that first round than Willard has ever been before. The challenger is going at the champion and score as quickly as possible. He realizes, as does his manager, Jack Kearns, that if it is to be accomplished the knockout must come early in the fight. Dempsey has done it so often that he is supremely confident that he can do it again.

Thoughtful ring followers see a way that Dempsey could possibly defeat Willard on points in twelve rounds. They say that Dempsey, with his agility and swiftness of arms and feet, would play around the champion at the sparring and boxing game. He would be able to outpoint the champion. But a fighter of Dempsey's temperament, it is feared, would not be able to play the game of the lion and the mouse with Willard, as Jim Corbett did with John L. Sullivan.

OLLIE PECORD,
Referee of the Big Fight.

TOLEDO ARENA WILL ACCOMMODATE 80,000

Construction Alone Entails Expense of $150,000—Built on Plot 600 Feet Square.

TOLEDO, Ohio, June 28.—Thrusting its raw, yellow skeleton skyward, the huge bowl-shaped arena, costing $150,000, and originally planned to seat 50,000 persons, is rapidly nearing completion for the heavyweight championship contest between Jess Willard and Jack Dempsey here July 4.

The arena is located in Bay View Park, a municipally owned plot of ground sixty acres in extent, and directly north four miles from the heart of the city. Before being turned over to Tex Rickard, promoter of the championship contest, the park had been used as a recreation centre, and the arena rests on the site of two baseball diamonds. On the north side of the park is Maumee Bay, and to the east is Maumee River. Encircling the plot is a road of crushed stone. The park is of artificial construction, most of it being filled-in land, but it is ideally situated in every respect. It is perfectly flat and treeless, making the work of the engineers constructing the arena easier than it otherwise would have been.

1,750,000 Feet of Lumber.

Some idea of the immensity of the arena may be obtained from the fact that it is four times as large as the arena in which Jack Johnson battered Jim Jeffries to defeat in Reno, Nev., and capable of seating four times as many persons. Approximately 1,750,000 feet of lumber has been used in the structure. Not a bolt has been used, the entire building being held together by nails, of which two carloads or 50,000 pounds, were driven. All the lumber has entered into the construction and will be sold after the contest.

Precautions for safety have been taken in the construction. Careful tests were made of the ground to find out whether it could carry the great human weight which would rest upon it. The carrying capacity of the lumber and the tensile strength of the nails were determined and a margin allowed for safety.

Although the structure was originally planned for 50,000 persons, a load of 80,000 persons was taken as a basis of the estimate and, instead of allowing 175 pounds per person, as is done in ordinary construction for "live loads," an average of 200 pounds was taken. This gave a total "live load" of 8,000 tons, but to allow even a further amount of safety margin, construction was based upon a 10,000 ton load.

As an insurance against any settling should rainy weather on the day of the match, or even a few days before, cause the structure to settle slightly, heavier footings were used. This entailed an additional expense of about $3,500, but Promoter Rickard decided it would be cheaper for the greater safety afforded.

Four Grand Entrances.

Nor is the actual safety of the spectators the only thing which has been considered. Every effort has been made to make it certain every ticket holder will get the seat to which his ticket entitles him. To take care of the big crowd there will be four grand entrances, one each at the north, south, east and west sides of the arena. At each of these will be four runways, one each for the $10, $15, and $25 seats, while the fourth will take care of the $30, $40, $50, and $60 ticket holders. In order to obtain entrance it will be necessary to present three separate ticket takers to guard against any one not holding a ticket slipping by.

Several hundred discharged soldiers, all having seen service in France, will act as ushers and guards at the arena. They will be armed. Bank clerks have been engaged by Promoter Rickard in handling the ticket sales at the arena and at the downtown headquarters on the day of the contest.

Precautions against "rushing" of the gates also have been taken. Outside the arena eighty feet distant will be a barbed wire fence, or entanglement, eight feet high and a half mile long, to keep the crowd away from the entrances. Closer to the arena will be a board fence twelve feet high, surmounted by barbed wire, while at the top of the arena itself will be a five-foot fence of barbed wire, with armed guards stationed every twenty-five feet. The $10, $15, $25, $30, and $40 seats also will be separated from each other by barbed wire to prevent occupants of one section moving into better seats.

Not One Stairway.

There will not be a stairway in the entire arena, which is 800 feet across. Entrance to the various sections will be along inclined runways, with a grade of one foot to every six feet, making the climb scarcely noticeable. The runways to the $10 seats, which will be thirty-four feet from the ground, will be 180 feet in length.

An allowance of eighteen inches seat-way has been made for each ticket holder. The rows will be two feet apart for all seats cheaper than $50, and eight inches more for the $50 and $60 seats. The seats themselves will be ten inches in width, giving fourteen inches legroom between them. The only difference between the cheapest seat and the top-priced rows will be the allowance of slightly more legroom.

The $60 ticket entitles holders to seats about fifteen feet from the ring. 176 press seats for newspaper writers taking up the actual ringside. There will be forty-two seats in the first row of the reserved seat sections, while the last row of the $10 seats will accommodate 1,900 persons. The first row of $10 seats will be about 276 feet from the middle of the ring.

Learned Lesson at Reno.

James McLaughlin, an industrial engineer of San Francisco, is the builder of the arena. McLaughlin is known to fight followers from coast to coast, as the arenas of some of the most important battles of pugilism have been constructed by him.

When the Jeffries-Johnson fight was switched from Reno, Rickard commissioned McLaughlin to build the arena there. McLaughlin completed the structure, with a seating capacity of 20,000, in seven days.

"My experience at Reno taught me a lesson," McLaughlin said. "We neglected to put up a barbed wire fence in addition to a wood fence. The result was that about 2,000 men climbed over the top and saw the fight without paying a cent. We'll fool them this time." Work was started on the Bay View Park arena on May 17. Two hundred men were employed in the construction. McLaughlin expects to have it completed the day before the contest.

ARONSON A DOUBLE WINNER.

His Horses Finish First in Two Events of Speedway Matinee.

Horses driven by Moe Aronson won two of the three races decided yesterday on the Harlem Speedway. In the free-for-all trot George Carden, driven by Aronson, won from Grand Chimes, a mare that has performed on the Grand Circuit. Three heats were necessary. Grand Chimes taking the second in the best time hung up during the matinee.

In the class for colt trotters Josephine B., driven by Aronson, took two of three heats, losing the second.

Al Warmer, with Bingen Worthy, won the 2:20 trot in three heats. The winner had to step every inch of the last mile and turned the last quarter-mile in 33 seconds, finishing in 2:23½.

MACKAY DISPERSAL SALE.

Prominent Horseman to Dispose of His Thoroughbred Stock.

Clarence H. Mackay, who has been identified with racing and thoroughbred production in the United States and France for nearly twenty years, announced yesterday, through Charles F. Hill, that he had decided to dispose of his thoroughbred stock. An absolute dispersal sale will be held at Saratoga in August, through the Fasig-Tipton Company. Mr. Hill will have charge of the preliminary arrangements as he has been closely identified with Mr. Mackay's thoroughbred interests for a number of years.

As President of the Postal Telegraph System Mr. Mackay finds his time very much occupied, especially since the taking over of the control of the telegraphs of the country by the Postmaster General. As the lines are to be returned soon Mr. Mackay feels that he must devote his entire time to the rehabilitation of his properties and the building up of an efficient staff in order to meet the requirements of the rapidly expanding business.

The Mackay stud was exported to France in 1910 as a direct result of the 1908 legislation which was hostile to the racing and breeding industries. The famous stallion Meddler was one of the horses lost to America through the expatriation of the Mackay stud. In the Fall of 1918 Mr. Mackay brought his mares and weanlings and the promising young stallion Spanish Prince out of France. The mares have foaled in Kentucky and have been bred for 1919 and will be sold with their produce.

Thoroughbred producers of the United States are keenly interested in Spanish Prince, which is a son of Ugiv and Galsorm and an inbred representative of the celebrated "Agnes family," which has produced in Great Britain and France such brilliant thoroughbreds as Ormonde, Sceptre, Sardanapale, Ormonde, Pommern and others.

BETTING AT EVEN MONEY ON FIGHT

Backers of Champion Surprised That Dempsey Followers Are So Confident of Victory.

Special to The New York Times.

TOLEDO, Ohio, June 28.—Betting on the Willard-Dempsey fight on July 4 started in earnest today and folks with real money are stealing the limelight away from the sports who have been making oratorical bets for the last week. Up to today there has been an absence of Willard money, but those who are backing the champion to win did not wait in vain, for they are now able to get even money. One New Yorker, who bet $2,000 today at even money on Willard, stated that he could not understand what kind of enthusiasm had seized the followers of the challenger that leads them to think that Dempsey has an even chance with the titleholder.

In every heavyweight fight of the past the champion has been the favorite. Paddy Ryan was a 2 to 1 favorite over John L. Sullivan, and when Sullivan fought Jim Corbett the betting was 3 and 4 to 1 that John L. would win. Corbett was favorite over Fitzsimmons, and Fitz ruled favorite over Jim Jeffries. Jeff was favorite over Jack Johnson at Reno, and Black Jack was favorite over Jess Willard at Havana.

The fact that this is only a 12-round fight has held the betting back. Referees' decisions have ever been the source of dissatisfaction and always will be. If it was a finish fight, or even a fight for twenty rounds, thousands of dollars would have been bet by this time. The more that the fight fans think about the arrangement of two judges, however, the better they are pleased about it. If both men are on their feet at the end of the twelfth round the two judges, Major Biddle and Mr. Rickard, will make the decision, and if they disagree Referee Pecord will have the deciding vote.

There are many angles to the referee question, one of which is that in the event of the two judges not being able to agree on the winner, Referee Pecord might have an entirely different viewpoint than the other two, and could call the fight a draw. It is because of there being so many angles to a fight where a decision is liable to be made that the bettors are refraining from making wagers as they have done at other fights.

The number of men here who are willing to back Dempsey is surprising. At one of the hotels here there is a pool of $23,000 to back Dempsey at even terms. It is expected that this will all be taken up before the fight. The big bettors haven't reached town yet, and will not be here until a day or two before the fight. When the old-timers arrive, however, the Willard money will come to the front. The longer the Dempsey money is held in check the better it is for the Willard money.

No less a judge of fighters than old Tommy Ryan said today that Dempsey has no defense at all. His lowered head, according to the old timer, is a mark for Willard's left jab and his right uppercut. Of the thing about Willard's work that is noticeable to the old timers of the ring is that the champion is showing as little as possible in his daily practice bouts.

This afternoon, before a crowd of more than 4,000, Willard showed the fastest boxing of the week. He boxed three rounds with Jack Hempel and three more with Sergeant Walter Monahan. Willard hit both men more than usual and seemed livelier and more interested in his boxing. He slammed and uppercut his sparring partners and displayed considerable speed. Jess worked on the pulley exerciser for some time before he boxed, and when the rattling began there were more ginger and pep in his work. Willard left his jaw open several times and let his boxing partners slam him hard, which delighted the crowd.

The training camps are about five miles from the city, and the parade of automobiles was larger than ever. The congestion on the road has become so great that the police have taken a hand, and they mean to put a stop to speeding.

After Willard had finished his boxing show the mob charged on Dempsey's camp, where the crowd was so large that the spectators had to endure a lot of discomfort and inconvenience to see Dempsey at work. It is estimated that 4,500 spectators, nearly half of whom were women, saw Dempsey today.

Jack went through an act of shadow boxing that was impressively swift. With head down, he shifted and danced, ducked and sidestepped around imaginary opponents so fast that he reminded one of Jumping Johnny Dundee at his most playful moments. Before this exhibition Dempsey boxed two rounds with Bill Tate and three more with Jock Malone. The challenger let his opponents do most of the work today and nearly all the leading Jamaica Kid didn't get into the ring at all. He is morose and melancholy and says his jaw aches and his ribs are sore from Dempsey's punching. This is the result of the pummelling Dempsey gave the Kid on Friday.

The eighth side of the big wooden octagon at Bay View Park, where the fight is to be held, was closed up today and it is expected that the work on the arena will be completed early in the week. It was inspected on Monday by the city building officials. The last row of bleachers seats are just 278 feet from the ring. The local opticians are advertising field glasses for the folks who expect to get in the rush section, which costs $10 per rush.

The caterer who is to feed the crowd at the fight has ordered tons of food, and all the empty buildings in the city are being transformed into sleeping quarters. One large building, which used to be a department store, has put in 2,000 cots. Every train is bringing visitors, and by July 3 Toledo will be jammed to the last cot.

HOLY CROSS RANKS ALL COLLEGE NINES

Purple Won 22 Games and Lost One, Numbering Best Contenders Among Its Victims.

YALE BEST OF BIG THREE

Season Developed Much Keen Competition, Despite Handicaps from War Conditions.

College Nines as Ranked by The New York Times

1—Holy Cross.	8—Princeton.
2—Fordham.	9—Army.
3—Brown.	10—Boston College.
4—Cornell.	11—Columbia.
5—Yale.	12—Dartmouth.
6—Harvard.	13—Pennsylvania.
7—Navy.	14—Rutgers.
15—Syracuse.

The college baseball season which has just come to a close, while probably not providing the brilliant competition of some other campaigns, has at least left no doubt as to where the championship belongs this year. That honor goes to Holy Cross. The Worcester nine, which suffered but one defeat in twenty-three contests and met practically every strong contender in the East, stands out more boldly than any other title claimant in years.

But after passing over Holy Cross, the ranking of the leading teams is not so easy. While Holy Cross stood out all alone in the college field, there was some very strong competition among the other leading nines. The task of placing the teams is also made more difficult by the fact that many of the schedules, hastily arranged, made anything approaching a complete round robin impossible. Many of the nines which deserve high ranking did not meet one another to prove superiority.

An instance of this is provided by the Annapolis team. The Middies had a remarkably good season, sweeping almost everything before them. Yet a review of their season shows that they met nines from smaller institutions for the most part, teams that did not figure with some of the others which were competing for the college supremacy, and the Navy, therefore, does not deserve to rank according to the percentage of games won. Anyway, the Navy attained its one big object. The game with the Army is the only contest that counts heavily on the Annapolis schedule. To win that is an achievement. And since the Navy defeated the Army after trying in vain for many years, it has closed a highly creditable and successful season, and the Middies will probably worry little about where they are ranked with other teams.

To make a fair rating of the first fifteen teams it has been necessary to consider percentage of games won and lost, the opposition faced in each instance, the scores made on each occasion, and to compare the teams generally on their strength as shown over the Spring campaign. The ratings cannot, therefore, be considered as beyond dispute. The positions are awarded here on what seems to be a fair estimate of the strength shown by the various nines.

There is but small choice between Fordham and Brown for second place, but that little difference is in favor of the Maroon nine. Fordham won sixteen games out of twenty-one played. The team had one of the most difficult schedules that has been provided for the Bronx institution in many seasons. But the team beat Yale, Princeton, Columbia, Lehigh, Rutgers, and others, and was the only nine to win a game from Holy Cross.

Fordham Beat Holy Cross.

That victory alone entitled Fordham to consideration, but the one victory would not count if the Maroon had not had such a successful season otherwise. However, in addition to trimming Holy Cross by a rather decisive score of 10 to 6, the Maroon beat the Baltimore Orioles, which same club is now making a runaway race of it in the International League. Fordham had no better opportunity for preparation at that time than had the Orioles, and the defeat of a class AA professional team that has since proved such a strong club is a good indication of the strength of the Fordham nine.

Brown is easily third choice. The Providence aggregation had a remarkably strong team this year and mowed down some of the best college nines in the East. Their string of victories included two from Yale, two from Harvard, one from Cornell, and others from nines that did not present such a formidable array. Like Fordham and Holy Cross, Brown swept through the Eastern contingent with comparative ease, winning most of its important games. Brown has been turning out strong teams in both baseball and football in recent years and it is nothing new for the institution to conquer Yale, Harvard, or others of the upper strata.

However, contests with Holy Cross must be taken in consideration as they show relative strength. Where Fordham beat the Worcester nine, Brown went down to a 7 to 0 defeat on one occasion, and then, to show that it was not a mistake or freak of fortune, Holy Cross beat the Brown team again by a score of 14 to 0. Defeats by such wide margins leave no room for doubt.

Cornell, on its general showing, especially through the middle of the campaign, is entitled to fourth place in the ranking, while Yale, through victories over Princeton and Harvard, comes next. The Blue nine improved as the season advanced, and was a much stronger aggregation at the close than when the season opened. Harvard deserves a place above Princeton for its victories over the Tigers, and the Navy may easily claim a place between Harvard and Princeton. The Army, Columbia, Dartmouth, and Penn were inconsistent throughout the season, showing fine form in one game only to give a very poor exhibition in another. Rutgers got the most satisfaction out of the victory over Princeton, but earlier in the season it lost games to nines that were not up to the standard set by the leaders in the East.

While this college baseball season may not have been up to the standard of pre-war days, it was remarkably successful considering the handicaps that had to be overcome. All the colleges made a quick recovery after the war had ended and are entitled to much credit for the showing that was made on very short notice. The schedules had to be arranged somewhat hastily, and in some instances were incomplete, but on the whole were quite satisfactory.

Many Players Were Lost.

The greatest handicap to the teams was the loss of players through service in the army and navy. There was not an institution in the country that did not lose heavily in athletes from all branches of sports, for the athletes were among the first to rush to the colors. When the armistice was signed and the institutions began planning for a baseball season all were handicapped by a lack of material.

The fortunes of war, therefore, played a big part in the formation of teams this year. The stars of some colleges were mustered out of the service early and were able to return to the nines. Other players were retained by Uncle Sam until it was too late for them to do anything this year. But generally it can be said that practically no college was able to put out a team with the full strength that would have been there but for the loss of athletes to the service. Anoher year will find this condition stabilized. The larger colleges in some instances lost more heavily than some of the smaller ones, and this is claimed by some to account for the fact that there was a weakness on nines which usually dominate the college field.

But despite the fortunes of war and other causes which helped to handicap college baseball, Holy Cross turned out a nine this year that ranks with the best of recent years. It was a well-balanced team, with strong hitting, good fielding, and high-class pitching. It depended on no one star to carry it along. Moreover, it was well coached by Jesse Burkett and at all times played smart baseball. Throughout the season Holy Cross showed the effect of proper schooling. The team followed a definite system of playing according to the conditions, after the manner of a big league club, and was necessarily foiled when it met a strong hitting club or faced high-class pitching.

The strength of the Holy Cross nine is reflected in some of the statistics for the team for the season. In twenty-three games the Purple men scored 197 runs, against 55 for their opponents, nearly four to one. They had six shutouts to their credit, and only once in the season did they have but a one-run margin to win with. That was against Tufts, which team they shut out, 1 to 0. Later they beat Tufts by 6 to 1.

Gill Was Star Pitcher.

Edgar Gill, a Roxbury boy, was the pitching star of the Holy Cross nine, and to him belongs much of the credit for the great showing made. He was easily one of the best college pitchers of this or any season, and the consistency with which he won proved that he was no flash. It was no unusual feat for him to hold a team to two or three hits, and he had at least one victory in which he allowed but one hit.

A real test for Gill was in the week when he defeated both Yale and Harvard with but four days intervening. Facing Yale first, he held the Blue to two hits, and beat them by a score of 10 to 2. It was the easiest kind of victory for him. Coming back against Harvard four days later, Gill gave the Crimson four hits and blanked them by a score of 2 to 0. He closed the season by pitching one of his very best games against Boston College, which had been making trouble for some of the best of the college combinations. He allowed Boston College only one hit and won by a score of 7 to 0.

It was against Brown, which could be regarded as a team to test the skill of any pitcher, that Gill showed his real ability. He held the Providence tossers to three hits and struck out nine of them.

Holy Cross had a batting order that might well be called the Murderer's Row of the college baseball world. McGuire, Santora, Bowen and Maloney were the stumbling blocks for many a hurler. Santora was probably the most dangerous hitter on the team, and one who could give the ball as long a ride as any. He figured in many of the extra base hits that were made by the team.

Fordham presented another well-rounded club that could hit, field and run the bases, and that also received good pitching most of the time. Frank Frisch, the shortstop, was the star of the nine both as a fielder and a batter, and his worth has since been indicated by the fact that he has been signed by the Giants. Frisch batted .470 during the college season, and his hitting accounted for many of the Maroon's victories. Barkley was second among the hitters, with an average of .327. McNamara and Halloran divided the pitching, with the former doing the greater part of it. Sweetland worked behind the bat and was an able battery mate for the hurlers.

The various rivalries which form the sidelights to the season as a whole brought about keen competition this year, as of old. Yale triumphed among the Big Three, defeating both Harvard and Princeton, and justly claims the title in that particular struggle. As the members of the Big Three are more concerned over the contests among themselves than the final rating of all the teams for the season, Yale can be said to have had a successful year.

Yale Leads Big Three.

The Blue met with only one defeat in the triumvirate, and that at the hands of Princeton, which was to finish third in the series. Yale defeated Harvard twice, and took two out of three from the Tigers. The Crimson took two from Princeton, and thus established its superiority over the Jungaleers.

While Yale started with a team that was far weaker than those the university is accustomed to turn out, it improved toward the finish. The nine was composed of several players who had had little collegiate experience, and the showing made under the circumstances was creditable. Weakness at the bat was the biggest factor in the several defeats of the Blue nine. Frank Coxe, who did much of the pitching for Old Eli, was a freshman twirler last year, as was Robinson, and Selleck was with the freshmen two seasons ago. Four of Yale's defeats were by the narrow margin of one run, and among the Blue's accomplishments was the defeat of Fordham in an eleven-inning struggle.

Cornell disposed of its old rival Pennsylvania, this year in a manner that left no doubt. The Ithacans took three of the four games played with the Quakers and each of the games was bitterly fought despite the size of the score at the finish. Cornell made its spurt during the middle of the season after a bad start and again went into a slump near the end. Olson, pitcher, and Estes, catcher, were among the main supports of the Cornell nine. Quinlan at third and Spiers at short were clever fielders and good hitters, but the team lacked finish and was inconsistent. Penn's team was built largely around Pitcher Titzell and he accounted for practically all of the victories gained by the Quakers. With him out of the lineup Penn was not a match for any of the better college nines.

Though the Army and Navy teams played fewer games than most of the other teams, they provided one of the most interesting events of the season when they resumed their annual diamond struggle. And there has been much joy at Annapolis ever since the Middies finally conquered the jinx that had trailed them for years and beat the Cadets.

Columbia managed to get together a fairly good nine before the season was far advanced and after making a poor start came through with some good victories, Cornell and Penn being among its victims.

NEW STAKE ANNOUNCED.

Kentucky Jockey Club Arranges Rich Event for Two-Year-Olds.

Three stakes of unusual value, one of them a new one with an expected value of $50,000, are to close on July 1, according to an announcement just made by Matt J. Winn, general manager of the Kentucky Jockey Club. The new event, to be known as the Kentucky Jockey Club Stakes, will become the most popular two-year-old race of the American turf if the hopes of its promoters are realized.

Manager Winn has established headquarters at Covington. The Kentucky Jockey Club Stakes, of $10,000 added, is for two-year-olds at one mile, to be run in the Autumn of 1920. The other events are the Latonia Championship Stakes, $15,000 added, for three-year-olds, one mile and three-quarters, to be run in the Autumn of 1921, and the Breeders' Futurity, $5,000 added, for two-year-olds, about three-quarters of a mile, to be run in the Autumn of 1921.

The Breeders' Futurity and the Latonia Championship are older specials. The Breeders' Futurity of 1921 should have a value of about $20,000. The Latonia Championship, which was organized several seasons back and attracted its first entries in 1917, will have its inaugural running at Latonia this Fall. It is estimated that the value of this year's championship will be about $45,000. The championship for 1920, which closed a year back, should have a value of about $50,000. Because of the growing popularity of this race, the directorate of the Kentucky Jockey Club are not without hope that the championship of 1921 may have a value of between $55,000 and $60,000. Certainly it will be the richest prize for years to come for which American thoroughbreds will race.

Colonel Winn is authority for the statement that the Kentucky Jockey Club is about to announce a couple of newer races that will be of great value for decision at Churchill Downs and Latonia in the Autumn.

MERCURY FOOTERS WIN JUNIOR TITLE

N. Y. A. C. Athletes Run Away with Team Honors in Championships at Hoboken.

Memories of the days before America entered the world war were awakened yesterday with the holding of the annual Metropolitan A. A. U. junior track and field championships at Stevens Tech Field, Hoboken, N. J., when the New York A. C. representation swept everything before it in one glorious victory.

The games marked the return of the Mercury Foot organization to track and field championship competition after an absence which started when President Wilson signed the declaration of war. With the pick of college, club, and school athletes enlisted for the effort, the New York A. C. lifted the annual local A. A. U. title without any real opposition. Members of the club accounted for 55 points. This was 37 points more than the total compiled by the representatives of the Glencoe A. C., which finished second with 18. Pastime A. C. performers finished third, with 15. In fourth place were the athletes of the Paulist A. C., winners of the title last year. Against the New York A. C. strength yesterday the Paulist total was 8.

In the course of the afternoon six individual titles fell to the lot of Mercury Foot members. To these successes were added a number of other placements which went to make up the club's overwhelming score in the struggle for the team championship.

The successful competitors were topped by Anton Hulman, a Worcester Academy student who will soon enter Yale. He carried the Winged Foot emblem to victory in the 120-yard high hurdles, and in doing so gave an impressive demonstration of ability at timber-topping. Hulman scaled over the uprights without upsetting one. G. M. Weed, a clubmate, finished first, but was disqualified because he knocked over three of the hurdles.

This victory deprived Hulman of the pole-vaulting title, but did not deprive the Worcester Academy lad of a chance to display all-around form, which augurs for an attractive career in future competition. In the pole vault Hulman returned the unusual effort of 11 feet 5 inches, but while the event was still in progress he was called to the track for the final of the hurdles race. The victory in the latter event broke Hulman's junior career, and automatically eliminated him from the pole vault.

Other title winners for the New York A. C. were J. G. Simmons, in the one-mile run; W. I. Adams, in the quarter-mile run; Al Hulsenbeck, the Columbia runner, in the half-mile run; E. J. Weatherdon, in the running high jump, and D. Brown, in the running hop, step, and jump.

In winning the quarter-mile title Adams gave a brilliant display of form. In his heat the New York A. C. runner was penalized one yard for a false start, but came through victoriously. In the final Adams won by about two yards.

BEGIN GLEN COVE TOURNEY.

C. M. Bull Wins First Net Match from Warner.

Conflicting tennis tournaments handicapped the start of the Nassau Country Club's annual invitation event at Glen Cove yesterday, and with many of the entries busy on other courts, only a few matches could be played.

A feature of the opening day was the return to tournament tennis of Charles M. Bull, Jr., the old Crescent A. C. star, who has been in France with the American Army. The veteran won his first match without great difficulty, defeating H. W. Warner in straight sets, but then fell a victim to the back-hand drives of T. R. Pell, who annexed two sets by the identical scores of 6—4. It was by no means easy going for the winner, and Bull showed every promise of soon recovering his old form.

Raymond D. Little, another veteran of the courts, made his first appearance of the season in the doubles, pairing with L. E. Mahan, and winning handily from Seaton Porter and H. I. Foster.

Walter Merrill Hall made an impressive start in the singles, defeating C. C. Pell with the loss of only three games, while F. C. Inman and H. S. Parker formed another successful doubles combination. The summary:

NASSAU C. C. INVITATION TOURNAMENT

JAFFE WINS AT CHESS.

Oscar Chajes, ex-State champion, and Charles Jaffe met in a special chess match at the rooms of the Isaac L. Rice Progressive Chess Club yesterday, the new headquarters of the league champions being crowded to capacity. Friends of the two experts prevailed upon them to play a game with clocks at the rate of fifty moves an hour for a liberal purse. Chajes won the toss and a Three Knights opening developed on the board. As early as the seventh move, Chajes went astray, committing an error of judgment, which gave Jaffe an opportunity to institute a promising attack. Chajes lost a piece at the thirty-sixth turn, and, twenty moves later, resigned the game.

TILDEN DEFEATS WILLIAMS.

Wins Delaware Tennis Title After Sensational Play.

WILMINGTON, Del., June 28.—William T. Tilden, 2d, holder of the national clay court tennis championship, won the singles title of the State of Delaware by defeating R. Norris Williams, 2d, the national singles champion in 1914 and 1916, on the turf courts of the Wilmington Country Club today, 6—1, 6—3, 6—1.

Tilden's versatility was an outstanding feature of the contest. His sensational speed, coupled with his slashing drives, proved entirely too much for Williams, who was outwitted on numerous occasions. Tilden cut the ball with terrific speed, and sent it to all corners of the court with uncanny accuracy. Williams was baffled, never seeming able to do the right thing at the psychological moment. On the other hand, Tilden was master at all times, playing with a speed and recklessness which was nothing short of marvelous.

Tilden and Vincent Richards, national doubles champions, were eliminated in the fourth round by J. T. Thayer and Stanley Pearson, 6—4, 7—9, 7—5. Thayer and Pearson were defeated in the semi-finals by Dixon and A. G. Thayer, 6—4, 6—2.

BEEKMAN AND BAGGS WIN

Will Meet in Final of Middle States Tennis Tourney.

Leonard Beekman and Fred C. Baggs will play the final round of the Middle States championship at the Orange Lawn Tennis Club this morning, the winner then challenging Walter Merrill Hall for the coveted title.

The finalists in the doubles are Philip and Ludlow Van Deventer of Plainfield, and the international combination of Ichiya Kumagae and Harold Throckmorton. The defenders in this event are Dr. William Rosenbaum and E. A. Clare. In the women's singles Miss Helene Pollak and Miss Florence Ballin remain to fight it out for the honor of meeting Mrs. H. S. Green for the middle States title. There were numerous defaults and several upsets in yesterday's hasty continuation of the much interrupted tournament.

A. D. Hammett surprised the gallery by putting out Dr. Rosenbaum in straight sets, and Miss Polla's victory over Miss Marie Wagner was also unexpected, while Miss Ballin disposed of Mrs. D. C. Mills in unusually one-sided fashion. Beekman won a commendable victory over Kashio, last year's challenger, in the semi-finals, and the success of the Van Deventer brothers in the doubles, particularly in defeating Hartman and Emerson, was well merited, the Princetonians showing both teamwork and individual skill.

The summaries:

WIMBLEDON, June 28. (Associated Press.)—C. P. Dixon, of England, beat Dean Mathey, of the United States, today in the fourth round of the international tennis tournament in progress here. The score was 6—4, 7—5, 5—7, 6—3.

R. V. Thomas, of England, defeated Willis Davis, United States, 2—6, 7—5, 7—5, 6—4.

C. Garland, United States, defeated Lieutenant Graves, 6—0, 8—6, 3—6, 6—2.

O'Hara Wood, Australia, beat Captain Watson M. Washburn, United States, 12—14, 6—3, 6—4, 4—6, 6—3. This match is considered the best seen here this year in tennis singles.

Only one American, Garland, survives in the last eight.

ADVANCE IN JUNIOR TENNIS.

Edgar Dawson and Harry Brunie became the finalists for the Manhattan junior title at the New York Tennis Club yesterday afternoon. The former eliminated Jerry Lange at 6—4, 6—4, while the latter won rather unexpectedly from Travers Le Gros by the score of 6—4, 6—3. The final round will be played on Monday, the winner becoming eligible for competition in the national junior championship.

Brunie's victory over Le Gros was the result of hard hitting, the loser showing a well rounded game, but crumbling before the speed of his tall opponent. Lange made a fine showing against Dawson, but fell just short of the physical strength needed to pull out each set.

Started Intercollegiate Chess.

The funeral of Edward A. Caswell, a graduate of Yale, Class of '86, who died suddenly at the home of his son Kenneth, West Chester, Penn., was held at the Church of the Holy Communion, Sixth Avenue, yesterday. Mr. Caswell became noted in the chess world by organizing the Intercollegiate Chess League, composed of Columbia, Harvard, Yale, and Princeton.

GREAT AUTO DRIVERS IN DUEL OF SPEED

De Palma-Wilcox Match to Precede 100-Mile Derby at Sheepshead Bay.

The individual 30-mile race in three heats between Ralph De Palma and Howard Wilcox at Sheepshead Bay Speedway, July 4, will be run before the 100-mile classic, and will serve as an appetizing tidbit for the International Sweepstakes. Ralph De Palma, holder of all world's records up to twenty miles, is considered the best pilot in short flights against time, and Wilcox, who is noted for his personal daring, and who won the 500-mile race at Indianapolis on Memorial Day, holds the honors over longer routes. The race between De Palma and Wilcox will be run off in three 10-mile heats, with a purse of $3,000 for the winner.

The 100-mile International Derby, to be run after the great match race, will bring sixteen noted drivers, piloting high-powered machines, to the starting line. For this event, $10,000 will be given in eight prizes, the leading man getting the first purse of $4,000. De Palma and Wilcox are entered in this contest, and Tommy Milton, winner of the Uniontown race and one of the best drivers in the game, are considered the favorites.

Dave Lewis and Eddie O'Donnell will be at the wheels of their celebrated whirlwind racing cars, as will Joe Boyer, Joe Thomas, Denny Hickey and a half dozen lesser known men. Another driver who applied for entrance last week is William W. Brown, Canadian champion. At the Santa Monica races early in the season Brown drove his Richards Special, which has done more than 123 miles an hour in races, and may be a strong competitor in the Sheepshead Bay contest. Elmer Shannon has wired that his machine, with a twin six motor which has turned more than 120 miles an hour on a two-mile track, is on the way to the track, and Hickey's Frontenac was to arrive Saturday. He has reduced the weight of his mount, making it, he feels certain, much faster than when he competed in the International Sweepstakes.

It is possible that the 100-mile record will be shattered, for much faster motors for racing machines have been developed since the war. The tendency of modern racing car construction has been toward smaller machines with high-powered aero motors. The Packard Company, pioneers in the field of aviation motors for automobiles, designed a car of this type for Ralph De Palma last Winter, in which he shattered world records from one to twenty miles when he shot over the beach course at the clip of 149 miles an hour. It is probable that a new mark would have been set in the Indianapolis Speedway event if De Palma had been able to continue at the rate which he was traveling, when, at the end of 300 miles, he was forced to the pits because of a breakdown.

"Howdy" Wilcox will pilot the Peugeot which won the 500-mile Indianapolis event. This French car has covered more than two miles a minute, and the driver is confident that it will stand this pace over a 100-mile course.

Three drivers, Milton, Lewis, and O'Donnell, will use Duesenberg machines in their effort to capture first money. Two Frontenacs, which proved to be exceedingly fast machines at the Indianapolis event, are entered, and eight special cars which displayed speed ranging from 105 to 115 miles an hour last week in practice spins, will be on the starting line.

Besides the two main races there will be two Spring competitions of 10 miles each, with a purse going to the winner. There will be opportunity for either De Palma or Wilcox to make more than $10,000 in one day's racing, besides the money obtained from various manufacturing concerns whose equipment they use in the race.

It is estimated that in a good year De Palma, probably America's most successful racer, receives more than $70,000 in prize money, excluding his royalties and outside earnings. This year, being one of the best in the history of auto racing, should bring the Italian-American driver, should he meet with his usual amount of success, no less than $75,000. Wilcox, who recently took first money at Indianapolis, is close on the heels of De Palma in the ability to convert into money his prowess in piloting his gasoline wagons around a course at tremendous speed.

Auto manufacturers now fully realize the importance of auto races as a means of testing motors. One of the reasons experts give that foreign countries were able to develop better airplane motors at the start of the war than was possible by American designers is that auto racing had developed the motor industry to a higher degree of speed efficiency in Europe than in this country. Because of this, it is thought by many racing men, the Government will encourage automobile racing in order to keep pace with the development of high powered motors of other countries.

FIVE IN TITLE CYCLE RACE.

Kramer to Have Sturdy Rivals at Velodrome This Afternoon.

Frank L. Kramer, who is leading in the fight for the American bicycle championship, will have Raymond Eaton, the latest sensation in bicycle circles; Francisco Verri, the speedy Italian; Eddie Madden, the Newark boy, and Alfred Goullet, the popular blond-haired star, to contend with in the one-mile national championship race at the Velodrome in Newark this afternoon. Kramer is credited with ten points in the championship standing; Eaton, 8; Madden and Verri, 8, and Goullet, 2.

There is also a one-third-mile amateur championship race down for decision, along with three other amateur and four professional races.

VOSHELL PUTS OUT L. I. TITLEHOLDER

Frank T. Anderson lost his title of Long Island tennis champion yesterday afternoon at the Kings County Club, succumbing to S. Howard Voshell, a former titleholder. The score was 3—6, 6—3, 6—1. The youngest Anderson had previously reached the semi-final round by a sensational victory over H. L. Westfall at 10—8, 7—5, and his physical inability to keep up the fast pace was largely responsible for his defeat. His older brother, Fred, maintained the honor of the Anderson family by beating Charles Chambers, 6—4, 6—4, and through the defeat of Harold Taylor, reached the final round, which will be played at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The ex-champion's elimination of Westfall was a highly creditable piece of work, as the veteran was hitting with terrific velocity, and seemed unbeatable after he had taken four successive games in the first set. The youngster, however, kept plugging away, taking advantage of his opponent's errors, and came from behind in both sets, to win by the narrowest of margins.

When Anderson took the court against Voshell he was in top form, and in the opening set clearly outplayed the Metropolitan champion. The latter had difficulty in judging his volleys, often hitting at balls that were on their way out, or flubbing the easy ones that he would ordinarily have put away unerringly. Anderson served and volleyed well in this set, and also seemed able to handle the wicked delivery of the left hander without trouble.

But about the middle of the second session the Brooklyn boy began to tire perceptibly. Voshell, moreover, was raising the speed and accuracy of his game by degrees, and only sustained brilliancy could have stopped him at this stage. Although Anderson once broke through for a love game on two fine passing drives and a pair of double faults, he lost his own service immediately after and was unable to score when the south-paw served again. The last two rallies of the set produced a couple of remarkable gets by Anderson. The first, off his back-hand, proved a winning shot, but the second, from the far right-hand corner, was smothered by Voshell at the net for the point which squared the match.

The rubber was one-sided, with Anderson's power of resistance almost gone and Voshell moving at top speed. The youngster won the opening game on service and then dropped six in a row for the match. His last chance vanished when he smashed an easy one out of court, and, after netting once, Voshell cashed in with a clean pass down the sideline.

Fred Anderson's victory over Chambers was expected as the latter is not yet up to his best game, but the old Brooklyn title-holder gave his tall opponent a good argument while it lasted, leading at 3—1 in the second set before the youngster began his final drive. Anderson's reach and volleying ability were too much for Chambers, and by keeping fairly steady he managed to win in straight sets.

Chambers had previously advanced by a victory over his old rival and doubles partner, Henry Mollenhauer, one of the historic figures of the Brooklyn courts. Mollenhauer dropped the opening set at 6—2, but put up a great fight in the second, his versatile service and steady driving keeping him in the game until Chambers succeeded in forcing him into errors and broke through for the match, 10—8, the final point coming on a fine drive past Mollenhauer's back-hand.

In the doubles the big match of the day brought J. H. Steinkampf and H. H. Bassford face to face with the West Side Club champions, R. J. Gatcomb and E. W. Davenport. The latter team won after a brilliant battle with set scores of 7—5, 7—5.

The summaries:

UPSET FOR HENDERSON.

Loses to Sachs in University Heights Net Tourney.

With more than 100 entries in the draw, another big tennis tournament was begun yesterday afternoon at the University Heights Club, the north side championship being at stake. A surprise of the first round was the victory of Harry Sachs over E. H. Henderson in straight sets, the winner playing better tennis than at any time this season. Francis T. Hunter's defeat of Allen Behr at 6—1, 6—0 was also unexpectedly one-sided, the loser going to pieces rapidly after being foot-faulted several times in the opening games.

There were several three-set matches, A. J. Carose winning the most creditable victory over Dr. B. F. Drake at 6—2, 3—6, 6—2. Among the second round winners were Paul Martin, W. M. Fischer, and A. von Bernuth, all registering in straight sets.

The summary:

INTENSE INTEREST SHOWN IN SPORTS

Record-Breaking Attendance Registered at All Kinds of Contests Since War's Close.

AMATEUR SPORT HAS BOOM

Accepting public interest as the barometer by which the popularity of sports is recorded, the high level of attendance at all sporting events this season indicates excellent weather ahead.

The crowds which have gathered at baseball games, horse races, boxing matches, golf and tennis contests, college and athletic club meets and other sports competitions have been larger than the followers of such events have seen for many a year at least, and the present season is heralded as the greatest epoc in sporting events thus far in the twentieth century.

Practically every sport was stifled by demands of the war, both on the players and on the public. With peace, all the components which helped put sport on the shelf were removed. Men coming back from service were eager to continue their outdoor life. Golf, for instance, is growing in popularity with tremendous strides, and thousands of returned soldiers are now among the club swingers. Women, too, who during the war were actively engaged in work and now feel the need of some recreation which will profitably occupy their time, have taken to the Scotch game.

Baseball also has felt the tremendous force of the popularity wave which has pleasantly engulfed all sports. Record-breaking crowds are attending the games. More than 25,000 watched the Giants play last Sunday, which is by no means unprecedented this year, and it is a conservative estimate that the average daily attendance reaches 8,000. A week's record of the attendance at the Yankee games shows that on Sunday, two weeks ago, 20,000 paid admissions were counted; on Monday there were 6,000, with 8,000 on Tuesday, about 10,000 on Wednesday, 8,000 again on Thursday, 9,000 on Friday, when rain stopped the play after the fourth inning; 24,000 on Saturday, and 26,000 attending on Sunday.

National Game's Drawing Power.

From such indications it is evident that the national game has staged a tremendous come-back. The Giants are estimated as drawing locally perhaps one and a quarter as many people as the Yankees, showing the daily average attendance at local baseball games to be far greater than in recent years. The western clubs, while they encountered poor weather which was accompanied with small attendance during the early part of the season, have picked up, and now have crowds larger than ever before.

Larger crowds than at any time during the past ten years are watching the horse races in the East. The average daily attendance, exclusive of Saturdays, runs to more than 10,000 persons. While in the past decade special races have drawn greater crowds, the sustained attendance at the tracks this season is much bigger than for any year in the last ten. The largest crowd was estimated at 25,000, at Belmont Park on Memorial Day. The Aqueduct races are drawing great throngs, and it is noteworthy that people are eager for the racing even under the restrictions imposed on betting in this section.

On nearly every Saturday, and on opening days of the great turf meetings this season, it has not been unusual to have 25,000 for a ticket count. Many persons are new followers of the racing game, showing that the interest in the track sport is spreading. In Maryland and Kentucky, where pari-mutuels are in vogue, attendance is limited only by the capacity of the plants. The new interest in the sport has been felt in Western racing also, crowds there having outnumbered the standing records of the last ten to fifteen years.

Intense Interest in Bout.

The Willard-Dempsey fight has helped add to the rejuvenation of sport, and with the ring in a centrally located city, the largest number of paid admissions ever recorded in this country is expected. The seating capacity of the spider-web-shaped arena is said to be more than that of the Yale Bowl, and the bout is expected to bring, provided weather conditions are favorable on the day of the encounter, more money than was ever paid to see any boxing match.

Small affairs between locally known fighters are not being neglected either by followers of the game, and these matches are well attended. Men who were taught to box while in the army and navy, and who never cared for the sport before, are being added to the ranks of followers of the mitted sport.

But the most noticeable change which has taken place in the public attitude since the war is that, while Americans follow professional sport to a greater extent than before, they are anxious now to get out on a golf course or on a tennis court and play the game for itself. In this the people are adopting the English idea of sports, where personal participation is the keynote. Army officers assert that it was the individual training in sports of the Englishman, especially among the class from which under officers were drawn early in the fight, that made it comparatively easy to put them in top condition in a short time.

In the trend to play the game for themselves, golf has been sought by more persons than any other sport, except, perhaps, tennis. Thousands of new players have been recruited since Spring. The idea of getting out in the open and taking some form of exercise has burrowed under the skin of many men who have learned their lesson from the war.

Great Galleries For Contests.

Interest in tournament play is greater this year than in recent times, and comparatively small events have drawn large galleries. In tennis, which has shared with golf in the increased popularity this has been marked. The turn-out at big events, such as the Women's National Tournament at Philadelphia, shows that a big season is scheduled for tennis. Because of this stands for 10,000 persons will be erected at Forest Hills, L. I., for the men's annual national tournament, in place of those of the regular seating capacity for 7,000.

The full reaction from the war will not be felt in sports for several years, followers of the various branches believe. The impetus and drive which has characterized the public's return to all sports this season will gather momentum, and will continue for a long period, according to present predictions. This is expected especially in college athletics, which, though hampered more than other branches of sports by the war, as practically all of the men who composed the teams were in the service and have had but a short time to train for post-war events, has shown a rebound which rivals the come-back of other divisions of sports.

More than 20,000 saw Princeton and Harvard play on the latter's class day. The Intercollegiates at Cambridge drew a large crowd and college baseball contests were generally attended by great gatherings of spectators.

Priscilla Wins Spring Cup Race.

STAMFORD, Conn., June 28.—The Priscilla won today's race for the Spring Cup of the Stamford Yacht Club one-design boats. She covered the six and half miles course, with a strong breeze from the East, by South, in one hour, ten minutes and forty-six seconds. Priscilla now leads in the cup series with nineteen points, Little Hope and Polly being tied for second with sixteen points.

MAX MARSTON WINS APAWAMIS TOURNEY

Baltusrol Golfer Defeats Grant Peacock of Princeton in Final Round, 2 Up.

FENN VANQUISHES DOWNEY

Ridgewood Champion and Home Club Player Put Up Great Game in Second Sixteen Division.

Three tournaments and four medals in many qualifying rounds has been Max Marston's portion thus far this season, for the Baltusrol golfer won his third invitation affair in the meeting of the Apawamis Club yesterday afternoon. He defeated Grant Peacock of Princeton by 2 up in the final round, the match being carried to the home green. In the morning Marston barely managed to take the measure of W. H. Gardner of Buffalo, while Peacock worked his way to the decisive stage by eliminating John M. Ward, the Garden City veteran of baseball fame.

In the decisive match neither man succeeded in gaining much of an advantage during the first half of the journey. Marston's chief lapses were on the greens, as it was a case of three putts at the first and again at No. 8, which caused him to lose both these holes.

On the other hand, Peacock saved a half at the fourth by sinking a tricky downhill putt of almost three yards, having previously topped his drive. Marston squared accounts at the short sixth, winning in 3, after Peacock overran his approach putt and missed his next attempt. Peacock also lost the fifth hole, after a shoved approach to a trap followed by a wasted stroke in the sand, while Marston, making no error, got a par 4. That placed the last named one up, and he would doubtless have won the next but for a stymie.

At that hole Marston sliced his drive to the edge of the rough, but got close to the green on his recovery, using a spoon. Peacock's second left him a little short and he overran on his next effort. Marston's short mashie shot left the ball about four feet from the pin, and playing the odd, Peacock lipped the cup and in so doing laid his opponent a stymie. The last named tried to get in with an iron, but couldn't make it, so it was a half in 5. The pair were level again at the short eighth, where Marston's tee shot took an unexpectedly long hop, the ball coming to rest on the far edge of the green. After that he needed three putts, losing the hole as Peacock got a 3.

At the 600-yard ninth, Marston won with a 5 to 6 and became 1 up, having gone out in 38 to Peacock's 39. After that only a single hole was halved. Peacock won the tenth, when he laid an approach to within twelve feet of the flag and got a "bird" 3, but he lost the eleventh and became one down again.

The contest was all square when both got 5s at the twelfth, but Marston became 1 up again by winning the eleventh with a perfect golf. He took 6 at the long fourteenth, but again had the advantage at the next, where the Princeton man topped his second shot and took 6.

The Baltusrol golfer played badly at the sixteenth, and Peacock won, so that it was a case of all even. The last named lost at the seventeenth, when his ball got behind the bunker on his second. At the home hole he sliced his drive and was got in the trap on his next, so that Marston won the hole in 4 and the match by 2 up. He had a 77 to the other's 80, as follows:

Marston, out	5	4	4	4	3	4	5	4	5	—38
Peacock, out	4	4	4	4	4	5	5	3	6	—39
Marston, in	4	4	4	3	6	4	5	5	4	—39	—77
Peacock, in	3	5	3	4	5	6	4	6	5	—41	—80

Good golf resulted in the second sixteen, where Harris B. Fenn, the Ridgewood champion, and Harold L. Downey of the home club flashed in the final round, the first named eventually winning, 3 and 2. In the third division E. L. Bloodgood of Cherry Valley and Norton Squire of Apawamis came through to the decisive stages after being involved in extra hole matches in the morning. Bloodgood defeated W. R. Nickolson of Wykagyl, while Squire took the measure of C. H. Jennings of St. Andrews. In the final Bloodgood won, 7 and 5.

The summary follows:

OARSMEN IN CLOSE RACES.

Good Competition in Metropolitan Rowing Club's Regatta.

Four rowing races and a swimming race provided plenty of interesting competition yesterday in the Metropolitan Rowing Club's thirty-ninth annual regatta held on the Harlem River. Close finishes ruled in the events, and, while no times were taken for any of the races, the crews sped over the course of one-half mile in fast order, aided by the tide and the wind.

The novice single shell race resulted in a victory for A. T. Stewart, who also finished third in the 50-yard swim. This event went to E. A. Black. In the mixed double gig race E. E. Farnan and J. J. Kelly rowed to victory. The centipede race resulted in a triumph for the crew composed of H. Martin, T. Zilli, J. Brodigan, and Joe Quinn. In the eight-oared shell race L. A. Jauss, S. Wells, Joe Mack, George Froelich, E. A. Black, C. Froelich, George Berner, George Machenbach, and A. Johnson were the winning crew.

John Schultz gave a burlesque exhibition of oarsmanship in which he several times nearly capsized his shell. He stood erect and indulged in a session of club swinging. Later he rowed about in a wash tub, which upset, to the merriment of the crowd on the float.

OVER 20,000 ENTER MEETS.

"Safe and Sane" July 4 Games Attract Host of Athletes.

New York's athletic talent, from the aspiring youngsters just starting on careers which they hope will result in their gaining championship brackets, to the seasoned veterans who hold titles and records on track and field, will be out in force Friday for the tenth annual Safe and Sane Fourth of July celebration which will be conducted in all of the city's parks, playgrounds, and recreation centres.

William J. Lee, Supervisor of Recreation and Director of Athletics of the Park Department, who is Chairman of the committee in charge of the huge program, reports that this year's events will surpass those which have been held in the past. An entry of more than 20,000 athletes has been received. Youngsters who are still attending the elementary schools predominate in this great entry, but there is a galaxy of prominent A. A. U. performers scattered through the huge outpouring, which promises to make the forthcoming celebration greater from every standpoint than any ever held since the celebrations were first instituted by the late Mayor William J. Gaynor.

The modern way of observing the nation's greatest holiday has increased in popularity with each succeeding year. The youngsters forget all about the dangerous and noisy guns and fire crackers in their eagerness to compete in track and field events for the medals distributed among the successful competitors by the city officials. The grown-ups, too, find plenty of attraction in the spectacle of all manner of athletes, big and little, prominent and obscure, and just plain ordinary novices who, perhaps, never before have donned a running suit, battling and struggling with every ounce of their strength in an effort to defeat rivals in wholesome sport.

The crowds which have watched these athletic meets at the various parks, playgrounds, and centres, have increased with every new celebration, reflecting the popularity of this way of celebrating the glorious Fourth. Accidents to children and adults on this holiday have shown a marked decrease, due, in no small measure, to the magnet of these athletic meets.

Fifty sets of athletic games have been arranged. The response to the 30,000 entry blanks distributed has been up to expectations, members of athletic clubs, scholastic teams, and branches of the Young Men's Christian Association and Young Men's Hebrew Association, having manifested unusual interest in the forthcoming games. Invitations to compete were extended to all the prominent athletes of the local district and many of them have accepted. These athletes will perform in special events arranged for them, in which they will measure strength with athletes of similar rating to their own. Special events will be conducted for army and navy athletes.

The spectacle of champions, record holders, and other topnotch athletes performing in these games, in the opinion of the officials in charge of the sports, furnishes incentive to the youngsters to devote part of their time to athletic activity, both for recreation and health.

While the greatest interest will centre around the athletic meets, track and field competition will not be the only sport conducted. Swimming meets have been scheduled for a number of the city's interior baths, and in these topnotch natators will compete, as well as swimmers of lesser rank. Folk dancing for girls and women and band concerts at many parks will also be part of the day's program.

WALKER BEATS DEAN FOR COLLEGE TITLE

PHILADELPHIA, June 28.—The finish of the final round for the individual intercollegiate golf championship yesterday over the east course of the Merion Cricket Club was one of the most spectacular in the annals of the event. The new champion is Arthur L. Walker, Jr., Columbia University. He got the decision over J. S. Dean, the young Princeton star, on the sixteenth green of the afternoon round of their scheduled thirty-six-hole match. At the finish the Columbia man was 4 up and 2 play, a remarkable performance in view of the fact that after the morning round of eighteen holes he was 3 down and apparently beaten.

Seemingly beaten when the final round started, Walker played with the coolness of a veteran, and in spite of some bad breaks, he never stopped fighting. On the other hand, as Walker gradually cut down Dean's lead, the Tiger lad began going to pieces. Dean won his last hole on the thirteenth green, then his game was shattered by Walker's steadiness, and the last three holes went to Walker because Dean was shooting all over the course with his drives and approach shots and was taking many more putts than the law allows.

Walker will return to Columbia next Fall as a junior. He is a member of the Richmond County Country Club, Staten Island. This season he won the Fox Hills tournament, captured the medal in the qualifying round of the metropolitan tournament, and was runner-up to Oswald Kirby in the finals of that meeting. Now he has added another laurel to his golf crown and also to the athletic achievements of Columbia University.

R. K. Hanson, Pennsylvania, played an excellent match yesterday in the final round of the second sixteen when he defeated his teammate, Daniel Rhoads, 3 up and 1 to play. Both of these men had better scores and played better golf throughout their eighteen holes than Scott and Dean did in the morning round. Hanson had three birds, while Rhoads had one. They played out the eighteen holes, Hanson turning in a medal score of 78 and Rhoads 81.

Following are the cards of Hanson and Rhoads in the final round eighteen holes on the second sixteen:

Hanson—Out	3	4	5	5	4	4	3	5	4	—40
In	4	4	5	3	4	3	6	3	5	—38	—78
Rhoads—Out	4	5	4	4	5	5	3	5	4	—39
In	5	5	4	4	5	5	5	4	5	—42	—81

First Sixteen.—Final Round—A. L. Walker, Jr., Columbia, defeated J. S. Dean, Princeton, 4 and 2.

Second Sixteen.—Final Round—R. K. Hanson, Pennsylvania, defeated Daniel Rhoads, Pennsylvania, 3 and 1.

EARLY START FOR CRIMSON.

Football Candidates to Report at Cambridge Sept. 15.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., June 28.—Candidates for the Harvard football team will report here on Monday, Sept. 15, when Fall practice will start under the direction of Head Coach Robert Fisher and a corps of able assistants. A number of the backs and centres will probably get together a week earlier and make their headquarters at Sparhawk Hall, Ogunquit, Me., where Coach Reggie Brown spends his vacation.

Coach Fisher is now busily engaged in picking his assistants. Percy Haughton, retired after giving Harvard football a top notch place, was largely responsible for the selection of his successor, and has promised Fisher that if he is in Boston he will do all he can this Fall to help. Leo Leary, long chief assistant to Haughton and his end coach, is through as a regular, but has likewise assured the head coach of hearty co-operation.

Reggie Brown will continue as scout. His retention is one of the strongest assets Fisher will have. The football committee is endeavoring to secure Derrie Parmenter to handle the centres, and Gil Brown and Huntington Hardwick will take hold of the ends. Harrie Dadmun and Bill Snow of the 1916 team will help with the linesmen.

Dick Wigglesworth, and probably Mal Logan, will coach the quarterbacks, while Fred Bradlee will be one of the backfield coaches. Pooch Donovan will act as coach and trainer. Work on the reconstruction of the gridiron in the Stadium started today. The whole playing field will have to be rebuilt.

More than a hundred men will try out for the team. In this number are Billie Murray and Babe Felton, the 1916 quarter backs; Morris Phinney, end, and Eddie Casey, half back, and probable selection for the captaincy; Henry Faxon, the 1921 captain; Mose Hadley, Tubby Clark, Tom Woods, Vic Nelson, Jabish Holmes, Bob Sedgwick and Marlin and Olmsted. For centre, Arnold Horween, Charley Havemeyer, Clark Macomber, George Flynn, and Phil Philbin; Joe Ryan, Chandler Anderson and George Lee for ends, and Dick Humphrey, Jim MacDonell, Ben Hubbeman, Jack Conlon, Phil Coburn, and Fred Church, the 1920 captain.

Ralph Horween, whose drop kick won the 1916 game with Princeton, and Rufus Bond, another "H" back, although in receipt of war degrees, are desirous of returning them and becoming candidates for regular diplomas as well as for the football team. The selection of a captain will not be made until late in September.

Hovey Wins Golf Title.

NEW BRITAIN, Conn., June 28.—Roger H. Hovey, of the Shuttle Meadow Golf Club, New Britain, won the State golf championship today by defeating W. Parker Seeley of the Brooklawn Club, Bridgeport, nine up and eight to play.

ONLY 12 YACHTS COMPETE.

Wind Keeps Down Entry List in Brooklyn Club's Regatta.

There was just a little bit too much wind for the racing men of the lower bay yesterday and as a result only twelve yachts came to the starting line off the Atlantic Yacht Club for the sixty-second annual regatta of the Brooklyn Yacht Club. The early morning weather conditions put a damper on the sport. Fortunately for all hands, the afternoon was ideal, notwithstanding the fact that several of the craft were compelled to carry reefs in their dash around the legs.

As there is still no official handicapper on the lower bay, the percentage division again raced boat for boat. The first craft home was the Tautoise, now the property of L. L. Beebe, Jr., of the Atlantic Yacht Club. Tautoise led at every mark, finishing the first round in 1:06:31, against 4:11:31, the time clocked for Chippewa.

In the knockabout division, Mouse, which is now owned and sailed by R. T. Supper, New York Canoe Club, had no great difficulty in leading home a fleet of four boats.

R. H. Finlay's Meteor practically had a sailover in the Star Class, as Murad, its only competitor, was disabled on the second leg of the first round and withdrew.

POLO AT CEDARHURST.

Annual Tournament of Rockaway Hunting Club This Week.

This week the polo scene will shift from Meadow Brook to the Rockaway Hunting Club at Cedarhurst, where the annual tournament will hold the stage for two weeks. The Santa Barbara four, who played so well at Meadow Brook, will again be in the saddle. This pioneer team to come from California to the Eastern circuit is wonderfully well mounted and all are hard hitters. W. H. Tevis is Captain and the others are G. G. Moore, E. J. Boeseke and Dr. H. H. Blackwell. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., and C. V. Whitney, a son of H. P. Whitney, have organized the Meadow Brook Alligators and will make their initial appearance at Cedarhurst.

Another Meadow Brook team will be the Rovers, with Thomas Le Boutillier, Q. A. Shaw McKean, and G. M. Heckscher as the nucleus. Whippany River will rely on G. C. Sherman, Archie Kinney, Leland H. Ross, R. A. Grannis, and Harry East. Cooperstown will be headed by F. H. Prince, Jr., and F. Ambrose Clark. In the first event for the Governors cup H. P. Whitney, Devereux Milburn, C. C. Rumsey, F. S. von Stade, Malcolm Stevenson, J. W. Webb, and L. E. Stoddard, with other high rated men, will be on one of the other of the teams.

The following is the entry:

Blizzard cups, for seventeen-goal teams.—Bryn Mawr, Whippany River, Meadow Brook Alligators, Santa Barbara, Rockaway, Cooperstown.

Rockaway cups, under the regular handicap.—Bryn Mawr, Rockaway, Cooperstown.

It will be the first renewal of the Governors' cup contest since 1916. It has been in play since 1912, and is a three-win trophy, with individual cups to the winning team each year. Meadow Brook and Cooperstown have each scored two victories, and Great Neck, which has not entered this year, has a single on the list. The two Rockaway teams for the low handicap events will be picked from William A. Hazard, Sr., President of the Rockaway Hunting Club; W. T. P. Hazard, his son; E. C. Cowan, L. Anderson, Dr. J. D. Richards, C. R. Leonard, Seward Cary, C. B. Dixon 2d, and R. W. Leonard.

ALICIA CAPTURES SEAWANHAKA OPEN

Club's First Open Regatta in Two Years Held Under Ideal Conditions—Entry Small.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., June 28.—After a lapse of two years, owing to the war, the Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club held an open regatta on Long Island Sound today under weather conditions that were almost ideal. A glorious northeast wind came whipping across the water as the committee, on board former Commodore E. C. Benedict's steam yacht Oneida established a starting line off Lloyd's Point. It was a splendid breeze for a race. Unfortunately, the number of starters was small in comparison to the races that have been held at the western end of the Sound. That was expected, however, as the breeze kept away all but the larger classes.

Although two big schooners had entered neither came to the starting line nor were the new O sloops of the Larchmont Yacht Club here. The Long Island Sound schooners were on hand, and two of the trim little double-stickers had a spirited race over a 14½-mile course, the winner being W. Baldwin's Alicia, which defeated E. P. Alker's Allure by one minute and fifteen seconds.

Ogden Reid, who has been doing so well in his New York Yacht Club 30-footer Lena all season, again won in the division, defeating Fred Richards' Adele by one minute and fifty seconds over the same course. As the wind came, the craft had a reach, a beat and a broad reach home. The 30-footers also raced on corrected time against Robin Hood III., the only handicap boat to appear at the starting line. Lena was not so successful in the mixed class, Robin Hood III. winning on corrected time by almost three minutes.

TERSE NEWS OF SPORTS IN TOWN AND OUT

Watson Goes to Minors.

The big league pitching days of Milton (Muley) Watson, formerly of the Philadelphia Nationals, have, perhaps, ended with the big twirler's sale to the Indianapolis team of the American Association. Watson has been purchased by Manager Jack Hendricks to replace Mike Prendergast, who was also purchased from the Phillies, but refused to report to the Indianapolis outfit. The acquisition of Watson is expected to greatly increase the pitching strength of the Indianapolis team.

Daley to Lead Holy Cross.

Holy Cross College's baseball nine next year will be captained by William T. (Barb) Daley of Torrington, Conn., whose selection has been announced. Daley played a material part in the remarkable record compiled by the Purple nine during the college season which has just closed. The captain-elect played right field, and his hitting was one of the principal factors in his college's success in twenty-three games of the twenty-four scheduled. The new captain is also a member of the Holy Cross football eleven.

Bloomfield to Have A. A. U. Meet.

Prominent A. A. U. athletes will have an opportunity to compete in the three-day celebration arranged by residents of Bloomfield, N. J., as a welcome to the town's returning doughboys. One of the attractions of the three-day carnival will be an athletic meet to be held July 4. Three open A. A. U. events have been scheduled and invitations have been extended to prominent athletes to participate. The events include a 100-yard dash, 1,000-yard run, and a 300-yard dash, all handicap events. These competitions will be conducted in addition to a program of events for residents of Bloomfield.

Kilpatrick Will Not Play.

Indiana University's football eleven next season will be without the services of one of its most dependable players, according to advices from Indiana. Kenneth L. Kilpatrick, star half-back on last year's S. A. T. C. eleven, has been advised by physicians who have examined him to retire from gridiron competition. Kilpatrick received injuries to his head in a game last year against Kentucky, from which he has not fully recovered. The prospect of a return of the injuries if he resumes his position on the Indiana eleven has prompted the physicians to advise Kilpatrick to forego further participation in the gridiron sport.

Stars to Run at Gary.

Joie Ray of the Illinois A. C., national running champion; Frank Loomis, low hurdles titleholder; Harold Irons and F. Marchall, both of the Chicago A. A., are among the country's prominent athletes who will strive for prizes in the second annual track and field meet of the American Industrial Athletic Association to be held at Gary, Ind., July 4. This quartet of stars are among the employes of the mills in South Chicago and Gary, and are, therefore, eligible for the meet. The Eastern section of the country will also be represented by topnotch performers.

Chicago A. A.'s Water Sports.

Encouraged by the success of a similar carnival last year, officials of the Chicago A. A. are planning for their second annual two-day public water carnival, which will be held in the lagoon at Lincoln Park, Chicago. The exact dates have not yet been determined, but the officials are planning to conduct the events either on Aug. 9 and 10 or Aug. 16 and 17. Spectators will be admitted to the banks of the lagoon free of charge. Efforts will be made to secure the entries of the nation's leading aquatic stars for the meet. Men and women swimmers will divide the two days' program evenly in point of events. The first day will be devoted to swims for men and women, canoe races and canoe tilting contests. The second day will probably be designated as regatta day. Four and eight-oared shell rowing races, single and double-oared shells, and war canoe races will be conducted. It is planned to invite eight and four-oared crews from Peoria or Duluth to give the rowing regatta an inter-city flavor. Last year the carnival was witnessed by a crowd estimated at 100,000.

Biting is Barred.

Almost anything will be tolerated in wrestling bouts, as has been demonstrated frequently in the past, but there are some things which even hardened wrestling followers will not permit, and among them is the habit some wrestlers have of showing their brotherly affection for each other by biting a rival when unable to secure a hold. Jovo Sajatovich, a Slav heavyweight grappler of Rockford, Ill., found this out recently. In a bout against Steve Savage at Rockford, the Slav affectionately slugged and bit Savage, the impression of Sajatovich's teeth being visible on Savage's hands, arms, and head when the bout was stopped. The Slav was fined a nominal sum in court the following day and was ordered out of the town without delay.

EDWARD C. CARTER DIES.

Well-Known Writer of Sports Was Former Champion Runner.

Edward C. Carter, racing writer for THE NEW YORK TIMES, died at 9:45 o'clock last night in the Staten Island Hospital of spinal meningitis. Mr. Carter's death came with a suddenness which shocked his legion of friends. He was taken ill in his home at Midland Heights, S. I., Wednesday and was ordered by his physician to the hospital. He is survived by his wife, a daughter, and two sons.

Mr. Carter was 56 years old. He was born at Clifton, a suburb of Brighton, England, March 24, 1863. He was one of the world's greatest runners, ranking second, in his time, to A. B. George, recognized as the greatest runner of all time. After he quit the cinderpath Mr. Carter took to newspaper work and met with success in this profession. His writings on athletics were accepted as authoritative. He was at one time sporting editor of The Sun. His recent years he devoted to writing horse racing for THE TIMES, and in this sport, too, Mr. Carter was regarded as an expert. He had been a member of THE TIMES staff nearly four years.

Mr. Carter's athletic career began Sept. 26, 1879, when in a one-mile handicap race at the St. George's Cricket Club sports, held at Gloucestershire, England, he finished fourth. In 1881 he came to the front as a runner when he won fifteen races at distances ranging from one-half mile to three miles. In 1882 he developed into a cross-country runner, as a member of the Mosley Harriers, then one of England's leading hill and dale clubs.

In 1885 Mr. Carter came to this country and attracted speedy attention by winning a number of distance races from scratch and placing in the cross-country championship. As a member of the New York A. C. in 1886 he won the five-mile championship and the two-mile Canadian title, and the following year successfully defended his five-mile title. In this race he set a world's record of 25 minutes 23 3-5 seconds, which stood the onslaughts of athletes until George Bonhag of the Irish-American A. C. erased it in 1909, when he covered the distance in 24 minutes 59 2-5 seconds. Mr. Carter's time of 25 minutes 23 3-5 seconds stood as a national championship record until the games of last year at Great Lakes Naval Training Station, when Charles Pores of the Millrose A. A. did 24:36 4-5 in annexing the title.

R-34 READY ON TUESDAY.

Will Start Flight as Soon Afterward as Weather Permits.

EAST FORTUNE, Scotland, June 28, (Associated Press.)—Repairs to the R-34 will be completed Tuesday morning if all goes well, and the officers of the giant dirigible need then only await orders to commence the Atlantic flight. It has been necessary to install one new motor and overhaul four others and to do considerable work on the huge envelope since the rough trip of approximately 2,000 miles the R-34 made over the Baltic. This work has been pushed as rapidly as possible so that there may be no further delay in making the attempt to cross the Atlantic.

The winds have been variable in the past ten days and do not promise to settle down soon.

"We will be ready to start Tuesday," said Commander Scott of the R-34. "After that it is only a question of the weather. We do not set a definite sailing time. Obviously, that is impossible until a few hours before we get away."

An attempt will be made to follow a course mapped out, but this is likely to be changed to meet weather conditions as they are encountered. No attempt will be made for speed, and if adverse weather is encountered the airship may be out three days. Her wireless worked well during the Baltic flight, and it is expected that East Fortune will be in touch with the airship after her signals have been picked up in America.

It was announced yesterday by the Mayor's Committee that tickets for the Independence Day celebration to be held in the Lewisohn stadium at the City College on July 4 could be obtained at the committee headquarters in the Hall of Records. A large program is to be given in the evening under the direction of Mrs. William Randolph Hearst. George Gordon Battle will be master of ceremonies, and Mayor Hylan will speak. Rosa Ponselle and Elsie Janis are on the program.

A pageant has been arranged by Ben Ali Haggin, and soldiers, sailors and marines will be in the final ensemble. Another event on the program will be a riveting contest, and teams from all the shipyards near the city have been asked to compete. Adolph Lewisohn has offered the use of the Stadium Symphony Orchestra, and the 2,000 members of the People's Chorus, under the direction of M. Camilieri, will sing the Recessional.

Beginning at 7:30 in the evening the band from the Brooklyn Navy Yard and a band from one of the army stations will furnish music until the regular program starts. Officers of the army aviation fields on Long Island also have promised to send a squadron of airplanes to manoeuvre over the stadium, and it is probable that trick fliers also will take part in this display.

URGES THE NEED OF IRISH SOLUTION

London Times Appeals to Lloyd George and Colonial Peace Delegates to Act at Once.

DOUBTS URGENCY IS KNOWN

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 27.—The Times in an editorial on the Irish problem suggests that Lloyd George and the delegates of the overseas dominions after the signing of the Peace Treaty at Versailles today "might well turn their thoughts to another settlement that is scarcely less urgent," the settlement of the Irish question.

"Though primarily and necessarily a British concern," says The Times, "it is international in the sense that it affects the relationship between the English and the Irish nations, and also the relations of the free self-governing communities of the British Commonwealth with each other. We doubt whether the British Government has yet turned its thoughts intensely and constructively to it. We are not sure that they understand as they should and must the urgency of settling it in a large and honest way, but we are sure that unless they take it in hand with the utmost promptitude and good-will they will encounter insuperable obstacles in the work of national reconstruction and development that awaits them, and will find themselves hampered at every turn in their other activities at home and abroad.

"The settlement must be based upon the determination that under the British crown and within the framework of the British Commonwealth Ireland shall be her own mistress. We believe in the possibility not only of promoting Irish welfare under a rather generous system of Irish self-government, but also in the possibility of fostering reciprocal comprehension and good-feeling between the English and Irish nations, when the proof of English fairmindedness and friendship shall have removed from Irish minds the fog of suspicion and distrust that not altogether without reason beclouds their present vision."

The Times begins today the publication of a series of articles embodying a broad survey of the Irish problem written by "a competent and experienced Irishman, free from party ties or preoccupations." The first article says:

"There are good grounds for the belief that as a political force the Sinn Fein has passed its maximum, but it is still strong enough to secure the return of its candidates in practically all the seats it holds. The most sinister feature of the new movement is the tacit acceptance by the whole party of the excesses of its extreme members. It is symptomatic of a discontent so deep-seated that it distorts all clear vision and perverts all sane impulses. The events since the rebellion of 1916 have, however, unreasonably intensified anti-British feeling.

The peasant of Galway, of Kerry, or of Clare, though he cares little for the claims of Ireland at the Peace Conference and less for the fullest demand, is standing most effectively for hostility to Great Britain, and he votes solidly for the Sinn Fein, and so it is that the more extreme form of nationalism has spread in Ireland. It has spread from Ireland throughout the Irish race in the Dominions and in America. The Irish citizens of the Empire are caught by new terminology. They respond to the new note of self-reliance.

"In the United States the Irish-Americans, who once so strongly supported Redmond, have now transferred their alligance to de Valera and the Irish Republic. This has a distinct reaction on Ireland. The Sinn Fein leaders appeal to Irish America for a confirmation of their policy. They are answered by sounding resolutions. Their Irish followers are well satisfied. Influences hostile to Great Britain work busily to fan the flames. The just vision of Americans becomes obscured and it is essential to the interest of British and American relations that the claims of Ireland so widely advertised in the United States shall forthwith be judged by Britain before the world.

"To Britain alone belongs that right, and that right implies a duty. Fatal to the settlement of the question, fatal to the sense of proportion, and of the facts, which nationalism must bring to any grave discussion of the future status of Ireland, is the idea that Britain will submit herself to external pressure, however friendly, on affairs of the United Kingdom."

BOSTON GREETS DE VALERA.

He Will Address the State House of Representatives Monday.

BOSTON, June 28.—Eamonn de Valera received a tumultuous greeting when he stepped off his train at the South Station tonight on his arrival from New York to bring the message of the "Irish Republic" to New England. Cheers and shouts came from the throng which packed one end of the train shed and the sidewalks and streets outside the station.

Members of the City Council who had been designated by Mayor Peters to welcome the Irish visitor had difficulty in forcing a passage through the crowd to a waiting automobile. Escorted by several other cars, Mr. de Valera was taken to the Copley Plaza Hotel, in the Back Bay District, the crowd closing in behind and on both sides, accompanying the automobiles for the entire distance. A band headed the procession.

The City Councilmen remained with Mr. de Valera for an informal dinner at the hotel. Later in the evening a reception was given to him by the Gaelic Club.

Mr. de Valera will address a mass meeting at Fenway Park tomorrow afternoon. On Monday he will speak before the State House of Representatives.

McCARTAN IN CHARGE HERE.

Will Act for the President Until de Valera Returns Tomorrow.

Dr. Patrick McCartan, "envoy" of the Sinn Fein Irish Republic to the United States, assumed sole charge of the "Irish White House" in the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday upon the departure of "President" de Valera for Boston, where he speaks today. The "envoy" will be in charge until de Valera returns, either tomorrow night or Tuesday.

Dr. de Valera took the 1 o'clock train, and when he reached the Grand Central Terminal he found a big crowd waiting. It was the usual Saturday throng of week-enders, and they were waiting, not for the Irish Executive, but for trains. Aside from three Irish porters and four women, there was nobody on hand to bestow a last look on Ireland's "President" as he slipped through the gates. A large group of friends, however, had wished him luck before he left the Waldorf.

Accompanying de Valera were former Congressman Joseph F. O'Connell of Boston, Harry J. Boland, and the Rev. Thomas J. Wheelwright, de Valera's half brother.

[illegible] IN EARNING ASSETS

[illegible]ase of $12,000,000 In the Last Week—Decline In Reserve Ratio of the Banks.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Continued [illegible]drawals of Government deposits and [illegible]ation of war paper, as against sub-[illegible] gains in other discounts and [illegible]tances on hand, are indicated by [illegible] Federal Reserve Board's weekly [illegible] statement issued as at the close of [illegible]ess on June 27. Gold reserves show a decline of $17,900,000 for the week and of about $54,000,000 since June 6, the Friday preceding the date of removal of the gold embargo. Federal Reserve notes in circulation resumed their upward course, the increase being $10,-900,000.

As against a decrease of $65,400,000 in the holdings of war paper, the statement shows increases of about $28,000,-000 in other discounts and of $29,800,000 in acceptances on hand. Considerable purchases of acceptances from member banks are reported by the New York bank both for its own account and the account of other Reserve banks. An increase of $2,200,000 in Treasury certificates is accompanied by an increase of $8,400,000 in the bank's aggregate liabilities on Federal Reserve Bank notes in circulation. Total earning assets show an increase of $12,600,000.

Net withdrawals of Government funds totaled $87,900,000, member bank's reserve deposits show a gain of $64,400,-000, while the "float" carried by the Reserve banks declined $14,500,000. Other deposits, including foreign Government credits, likewise show a considerable decrease, the result of these changes being a decrease in net deposits of $20,-000,000. The bank's reserve ratio shows a decline from 52.5 to 42.1 per cent.

PLAN TO AID ROADS OFFERED BY PROUTY

URGES FEDERAL GUARANTEE

Asserts Rates Must Be Fixed to Insure Fair Profit on Values and to Protect Weaker Lines.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—A comprehensive program for legislation looking to the return of the railroad systems to their former owners on Jan. 1, 1920, is presented by C. A. Prouty, formerly of the Interstate Commerce Commission and now Director of the division of public service of the United States Railroad Administration, in a letter to Senator Cummins, Chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, which is at work on the railroad problem.

Mr. Prouty believes that the Government should retain sufficient control for at least one year after Jan. 1, 1920, in order to facilitate decisions as to settlements under contracts and the readjustments in connection with the use of terminals, &c. He believes rates should be granted which would guarantee a fair return upon the average values affected by them, the values to be determined by the commission created under the valuation act of 1913.

Railroads which earn on this basis more than a certain return to stockholders, (from 6 to 7 per cent.,) should share with the Government a part of the surplus earnings, Mr. Prouty argues. Some of the money which would be paid to the Government under such an arrangement, he writes, might be used to assist less fortunate railroad systems. Mr. Prouty in his letter says:

"To return the railroads back to their owners without providing some means by which adequate revenue will be provided would mean financial disaster to many, perhaps to most of the carriers. This would be both wrong and foolish. Railroad securities are widely distributed among the general public. Industry and commerce cannot permanently thrive and develop unless the condition of our railroads is fairly prosperous.

"The revenue situation of the railroads before they were taken over by the Government was not satisfactory. This was due, not so much to inadequacy of revenue upon the whole, as to the manner in which that revenue was distributed between different carriers, and to the uncertainty which surrounded the whole railroad situation. Railroad earnings for the test period, so called—that is, for the fiscal years 1915, 1916, and 1917—were the best of any three consecutive years in the recent history of our railways. Those earnings probably amounted to a fair return upon the property devoted to the public service, and yet the credit of our railroads as a whole was steadily declining.

Wants Fair Returns for Carriers.

"The problem is to devise some method by which under private ownership rates shall be established which will yield to the carriers a sufficient revenue without imposing upon the public an unjust burden. Moreover, that plan must be such as can be adapted to the present exigency. As a contribution to the general discussion the following suggestions are made:

"Rates to be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Such rates to be absolute, with no right upon the part of the carrier to vary up or down.

"State rates to be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission in collaboration with the State Commission, or perhaps by the State Commission, with the right of appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission shall have power to fix divisions, and also to approve agreements for the routing of traffic and the division of earnings from competitive traffic, but not until after full hearing upon notice to all interested parties, including the general public.

"The right to initiate rates, supervised as it is by the Interstate Commerce Commission, has been for the last five years of no advantage to the carrier. No advance in rates has been made which could not have been secured by an application to the commission for a change in the rate.

"The right to reduce the rate without leave of the commission has not benefited the public, but has in the main proved a sort of vicious discrimination and disorganization.

"It is said that the commission could not make the railway rates of this country; and it could not with its present organization. With a proper organization it could make and publish those rates at a tithe of the expense under which the carriers now rest in that behalf.

"While the interstate rates present many difficulties in the solution, they are not at all insuperable. If some plan of actual co-operation can be put into effect they will disappear.

"The commission should have power to fix the divisions of a joint rate when the carriers themselves do not agree, thereby justly distributing the charge for the entire service among those carriers which participate in that service.

"In many cases competition might well be restrained with advantage to the carriers and without detriment to the public. To this end carriers should be permitted to enter into arrangement for the routing and division of traffic, or for the division of earnings from competitive traffic. Such arrangements should only be permitted with the approval of the commission and upon conditions fixed by it.

"The railroads of this country should be self-supporting. To this end Congress should instruct the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish such reasonable rates as will yield a fair return upon the value for rate making purposes which it establishes.

"The amount of this return ought not to be prescribed. In the nature of things it cannot be the same upon the value of all carriers. To establish rates which would yield a given return (say, 6 per cent.) upon the value of the most unfortunate carrier, would exact from the public too high transportation charges, while upon the other hand, to maintain rates so low as to yield only an adequate return upon the value of the most fortunate carriers, would be extremely unjust to its less favored competitors. The rates should produce an adequate return upon the average value affected by them.

"The value upon which this return should be allowed is that value which the commission is now fixing under the Valuation act of 1913. For the last five years the commission has, under the requirements of this act, been collecting the necessary information from which these values are to be determined, and has substantially completed that branch of its work.

"Congress should provide that no carrier shall pay to its security holders out of its net operating income in any year more than a certain percentage upon the rate-making value fixed by the commission. The balance of its earnings should be distributed in the manner to be determined by Congress.

"The carrier should be allowed to pay to the owners of its securities which represent its carrier property, say, 6 per cent. upon its ratemaking value as determined by the commission. A few years ago this might have been too much. Today less would be hardly fair. This would probably enable the carrier in the immediate future, whose property was represented half by bonds and half by stocks, to pay a dividend upon its stock of at least 7 per cent. What remains over and above this in any year should be used for three purposes:

"(A.) A certain amount, probably 2 per cent. or 3 per cent. upon the ratemaking value, should be invested in the property, but upon condition that the amount of this investment shall not be made the basis of a claim for additional rates. There is in every railroad property, if the experience of the past be an index to the future, an invisible loss and a functional depreciation which cannot be taken care of in any other way. A reasonable rate should provide for this, just as much as for an adequate return to security holders.

"(B.) In some way a guarantee must be provided for the payment of future interest and dividends. There will of necessity be lean years and fat years, and the one should be made to offset the other. Rates cannot properly be varied every time the business increases or declines, with a corresponding effect upon net returns. This guarantee fund should not be invested in the property, but should be held in the form of some quick asset.

"(C) Any balance remaining should be divided between the railway and the public, the public taking more as the amount increases; as, for example, the first 2 per cent. to be divided equally; the next 2 per cent., one to the carrier and two to the Government; any additional amount, one to the carrier and four to the Government.

Plan to Aid Weaker Roads.

"Anything accumulated from this source by the Government might be devoted in some form to the assistance of the weaker roads.

"Assuming that this scheme might be a workable one if the roads were once more in the possession of their owners, what steps should be taken to restore them and put in effect this plan?

"1.—Government operation should continue as it is until Jan. 1. Within that time the commission will be able to judge something of the future and to determine what changes, if any, in rates may be necessary.

"2.—Dec. 31, 1919, existing contracts should terminate and the properties be returned to the operation of their owners. The Government should guarantee for one year a return equal to 75 per cent. of the contract compensation in all cases where contracts have been executed, and the carrier should be required to pay over to the Government in all such cases 75 per cent. of any excess which it may make over and above the contract compensation. If there is no contract there should be no guarantee and no payment.

"3. The Government should retain for one year from Jan. 1 a certain measure of control for certain purposes.

"Settlements must be made with the carriers, and to that end the Government must have the right to call upon them for certain assistance and information.

"In restoring these properties there will be many adjustments as to the use of terminals, the joint use of equipment, &c., as to which the Government must have power to act to avoid inconvenience to the public and due equity between the carriers.

Government Must Give Aid.

"If the Government is to guarantee a net income in any amount, it must have a certain supervisory power over the expenditures for maintenance of way and equipment.

"I also feel that it will be found necessary during this first year, while the financial status of these carriers is becoming re-established, so to speak, for the Government to assist in the financing of improvements, including the purchase of equipment. This, however, ought not to involve any loss upon the part of the Government.

"These suggestions do not profess to cover all the legislation which ought to be enacted at the present time. There is no mention of the supervision of securities, which certainly must be undertaken in some way by the Federal Government.

"Only the revenue situation, which really lies at the basis of the whole problem, is covered here. The Government must establish the rate, that is, the measure of compensation, while the private individual must furnish the service. Whether our system of transportation can be satisfactorily developed upon that theory is extremely doubtful, but it seems likely that some plan of the sort suggested will come as near meeting the difficulty as any."

NO HOPE FOR TAX DODGERS.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Tax dodgers, rich and poor, were promised the full limit of the law by Commissioner of Internal Revenue Roper in a statement today commenting on the recent conviction in Boston of William A. English and John H. O'Brien, wool merchants, who returned their taxes at $[illegible] instead of $1,379,[illegible].

"It is our determined policy," Mr. Roper said, "that wealth shall not influence to prevent willful tax dodgers from going to jail. The big and financially able must be treated in the same way as the small willful violator and hence compromises through money will be rejected."

Mr. Roper said the Government refused to allow English and O'Brien to pay $1,500,000 to escape prison sentences. Civil proceedings will be begun immediately by the Government to collect the tax due from the two men and 100 per cent. additional penalty.

Education Notes.

A communication from the Teachers' Union protesting against the manner of conducting the High School examinations in regard to the recent war, as being demoralizing, has been referred to the City Superintendent.

The vocational division of the City College announces a special eight weeks' course in business English, to be given this Summer in the Commerce Building, Lexington Avenue and Twenty-third Street, on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. The course is designed to give a thorough training in the basic principles of effective business letter writing as applied to sales, collections, complaints, adjustments, credits, mail order selling and executive correspondence. Students must register for the course before Tuesday, July 1, when the first session of the course will be held.

The Staten Island Teachers' Association has undertaken to publish the advantages of living and teaching in the Borough of Richmond. It is felt that teachers outside of the borough know little of the natural attraction of Staten Island and its schools. Questionnaires have been sent to every school Principal and teacher on Staten Island, and to every prominent citizen for information concerning living, social, and school matters. There are thirty-four schools on Staten Island, about 400 teachers, and about 110,000 people. Teachers who are fond of natural scenery, quiet surroundings, and suburban conditions usually find the island delightful.

Contracts have been let for the plumbing of P. S. 57, the Bronx, and for repairs to a number of other school buildings.

The Summer Public School baths will be opened this week, the money for their maintenance having been obtained.

The positions of Directors of Summer and Evening School Activities and Continuation Classes and Playgrounds have been created at salaries of $1,000 for each.

E SUNDAY, JUNE 29, 1919. E

ITY TO FIGHT FOR TRANSIT SYSTEM

position Develops to Move to Return Leased Lines to Owners.

EE TRANSFERS INVOLVED

ELIANCE PUT ON NIXON

rporation Counsel Contends Final Authority Rests In Public Service Commissioner.

The prospect that the New York Railways Company's system will be broken up by the separation from it of all its leased lines, with a consequent abrogation of the present universal transfer system and the substitution of a straight five-cent fare for every ride, has aroused the city authorities. Every effort will be made to keep the system intact, and to continue the transfer system, despite that transfers bring the average rate of fare down to less than three and a half cents and compels the company to operate its cars at a loss.

Tomorrow the Public Service Commission will begin hearings on an application by Job E. Hedges, Receiver of the Railways company, for permission to cut out ninety-nine transfer points and retain only fourteen, which cannot be opposed because they are provided for in the franchises. Commissioner Travis Nixon will hear the arguments, although he has been reticent as to the action he may take, the impression gained that he will grant the application, notwithstanding that the City Administration is opposed to any concessions in favor of the transit lines.

Tuesday Federal Judge Mayer is expected to grant the application of counsel for the Eighth and Ninth Avenue companies to separate these lines from the New York Railways system because of failure to pay the rentals. Judge Mayer said he would direct that the lines be returned to their owners for independent operation if a plan is submitted guaranteeing that the public will not be inconvenienced by the change.

It was also stated during discussion in court that it might be possible to continue the transfer privileges with several downtown lines. If this is arranged for, there is small doubt that an order will be made separating these important lines from the Railways system or that other leased lines, to the number of half a score, will follow with similar requests, and in the end the only lines left in the system will be those owned outright by the Railways Company.

May Appeal to Courts.

Representatives of the city assert that the abrogation of transfers is in fact an increase in fare and the Public Service Commission is the only authority having jurisdiction over rate fixing. If the commission refuses the application of the company to cut out the ninety-three free transfer points, and if the city objects to the refusal of the Eighth and Ninth Avenue lines, under independent control, to give transfers, court proceedings may be attempted.

It was learned on excellent authority that if this happen, the companies may apply to the court in an action alleging confiscation if they have to continue giving free transfers. This would place the matter within the control of the Federal courts, and the companies, if they prove their contention that free transfers make it impossible properly to operate the lines or maintain them, will be sustained.

If Judge Mayer orders the return of the Eighth and Ninth Avenue lines to their owners, his decision will probably stand, as it is not appealable. In opposing the applications of the companies, Corporation Counsel Burr called attention to provisions of the Public Service Commissions Law, enacted in 1910, several years after the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, the predecessor of the New York Railways Company, had passed into the hands of a Federal receiver. The receivership was used by the security holders to break leases and to cut off existing transfers, a proceeding authorized by the Federal Court on the petition of the receivers and the other companies.

The applicants in this case argued that operation under a five-cent fare system, with universal transfers, was unprofitable to the security holders. Mr. Burr contends that this attitude is in disregard of the interests of the traveling public. He has filed with the court a statement, pointing out that the Amendment to the Public Service Commission Law in 1910, provided no change should be made in the system of operating transportation lines "until and except as the Public Service Commission shall otherwise prescribe." He argues that the existing free transfers must be continued until the Commission permits a change.

Mr. Burr contends that the change in the statute has condemned as illegal the process of Federal disintegration by which the Metropolitan Street Railway Company cut off many of its leased lines, such as the Third Avenue, Second Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street Crosstown line, ten years ago. He says that the receiver is bound to obey all valid provisions of State law. He insists that, in consequence, the Public Service Comission is the only proper tribunal before which apicaton can be made to abrogate operaton under leases and to discontinue existing free transfers.

Mr. Burr quoted this provision of the Eighth Avenue line franchise when it obtained permission, Oct. 18, 192, to extend its line from Sixty-fourth Street to 110th Street:

"And if the right to construct or operate said branch or extension shall be purchased at said sale by the company applying for this consent, the same shall be operated as a part of the continuous line of the applicant, so as to enable any passenger, by transfer tickets or otherwise, to obtain the benefit of a continuous ride, for one fare, to or from any point on said branch or extension and any point on the lines of railroad of the company applying for this consent, whether the same be owned or leased by said company.

"And if the right to construct said branch or extension shall be purchased at said sale by any corporation other than the applicant for this consent, the said purchaser shall deliver and receive passengers at the point of junction with the road of the applicant, upon a division of earnings from such joint business in the proportion that the length of the extension or branch so sold shall bear to the entire length of road of the company applying for this consent.

"This consent is further conditioned, that no passenger shall be charged more than 5 cents for a continuous ride.

Mr. Burr said the receiver was appointed "for the professed purpose of preventing a disintegration of the New York Railways system." If the receiver is to live up to this professed object, the court should direct him to apply to the Public Service Commission for joint route and rate orders covering these Eighth and Ninth Avenue lines."

The application of the receiver, filed with the commission Friday, was for a general abrogation of transfers on all the lines of the New York Railways system.

"Under the terms of the statute," said Mr. Burr, "the commission has the power, if a railroad company does not agree upon the division of earnings under a general rate operation to declare the proportion of each fare collected which should go to the companies over which the joint operation extends."

May Grant Transfer Charge.

It was reported yesterday that Public Service Commissioner Nixon soon would decide that it was necessary for the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company to charges a two-cent transfer fare on its surface lines to make it possible for Receiver Garrison to place the property on a paying basis, and to enable him to dispose of the receivers' certificates authorized by Federal Judge Mayer. If this concession is made, a similar privilege, it was said, would have to be extended to all surface lines in the city.

It also was said that men eager for the success of the railroad properties believe unless the revenues are increased, all those which give free transfers will be separated, with the result that passengers will have to pay five cents for each ride.

Mr. Nixon feels that he has authority to abrogate many transfers which now are given free by the various lines, but he does not believe he has power to permit a direct increase of fare.

TRIPS FOR POOR CHILDREN.

Henry Street Settlement Plans Vacations for Boys and Girls.

The Henry Street Settlement, 265 Henry Street, is making special efforts in behalf of boys and girls who need vacations and are too poor to pay the expenses they entail. It is proposed to send 300 boys for two weeks each to the Settlement Camp on Lake Mahopac, and 600 girls to Echo Hill Farm and the House in the Woods at Yorktown and Riverholm at Grand-View-on-Hudson.

Sick babies and their mothers also are cared for during the Summer. In a circular appealing for support, the Settlement says $12 will save a baby's life, $25 will give two girls two weeks each of healthy outdoor life, and that $10 will give a city boy two weeks of real camp life. Twenty-six little girls can enjoy recreation and fresh air for two weeks at an outlay of $286. The organization also provides for colored children at Lincoln Home, which has the use of a plot of land at 218th Street, where vegetables are raised and farming is taught.

URGES HOLIDAY ON SEPT. 17.

Security League Begins Campaign to Mark Constitution's Adoption.

The National Security League announced yesterday that it had begun a campaign for the observance of Sept. 17 as a national holiday throughout the country. It is suggested that the day be called Independence Day, because it is the anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution. It is also urged that a special effort be made on that day to teach American ideals and to counteract malicious influences that seek to destroy and undermine the American Government.

State units have been formed to further the plan and several patriotic organizations have pledged their support. Some of the speakers who have consented to address meetings on Constitution Day are James M. Beck, Alton B. Parker, Nicholas Murray Butler, Theodore R. Coudert, Dr. John H. Finley, John M. Parker, Albert Bushnell Hart, and Governors Smith of New York, Goodrich of Indiana, Sproul of Pennsylvania, Cornwell of West Virginia, Carey of Wyoming, Harding of Iowa, Allen of Kansas, and Roberts of Tennessee.

"The National Surety League enlisted the co-operation of the great patriotic organizations of the country in this effort to combat the forces of disorganization and destruction by going to the root of the evil," said the announcement. "In all its activities against the growing menace of Bolshevism in this country, which is occupying the principal attention of the Security League at this time, the league is working on the basic idea that the best antidote for Bolshevism is Americanism, and that Americanism is purely a question of education. Believing that a thorough knowledge and appreciation of the real meanings of American institutions and ideals by all the people will effectually overcome all un-American doctrine, the Security League launched this great nation-wide constitutional celebration and preliminary campaign of interpretation as the best means to this end."

GERMAN EXPENSES HIGH.

Peace Delegation's Bill at Versailles Was 250,000 Marks.

BERLIN, June 14, (correspondence of the Associated Press.)—The financial authorities who have been entrusted with the paying of the German delegation's bills at Versailles have discovered today that the expense for the 250 delegates, experts, clerks, and stenographers just for living alone for five weeks totals a quarter of a million marks. This naturally does not include the personal expenses which in themselves are very considerable.

This great expense is due partly because of the bad state of the German Exchange, which is less than one-half that of the French franc, so the delegates must pay the French more than two hundred marks daily apiece.

JERSEY OPENS FIGHT ON N. Y. INCOME TAX

Attorney General Declares Provisions Affecting Nonresidents Are Unconstitutional.

CITES MANY PRECEDENTS

Says Law Conflicts with Section 4 of Federal Constitution—State to Finance Legal Action.

In giving an opinion that some of the provisions of the New York State income tax law are unconstitutional, Thomas F. McCran, Attorney General of New Jersey, declares that no wrong is done to New Jersey as a State and that, technically, the wrong is done to the private citizens who are compelled to comply with unjust provisions of the law. He points out, however, that counsel should be engaged in New York to oppose the law because so many thousands of New Jersey residents must pay taxes under the law. His opinion, which was made public by Governor Runyon yesterday, follows in part:

"Subject to the limitations imposed by the Federal Constitution it is well settled that the several States, each in the exercise of its reserved powers of municipal sovereignty, acting through its Legislature, when not restrained by its own Constitution, may, for public purposes, tax all property within its jurisdiction, excepting of course property and securities of the Federal Government.

"The task before me, then, seems to be to ascertain whether or not the act under consideration in its provisions affecting citizens of the State of New Jersey encroaches upon the rights and privileges secured to citizens of the State of New Jersey by the Federal Constitution.

State's Right to Tax.

"While it is quite true that a State's right to tax extends to everything and everybody within its jurisdiction, still I am not prepared to concede that the earnings of nonresidents of the State of New York, arising from occupations carried on within that State, have a situs there for purposes of taxation. It seems to me that a fundamental question is here presented as to whether or not such a nonresident's services, in his profession, for instance, should not be considered as a sale of such services and thus bring him within the provisions of Paragraph 3 of Article VIII. of the Federal Constitution, giving to the Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several States.

"A further examination of the act discloses discrimination on the part of the State of New York against nonresidents. Under Paragraph 3 of Section 359 the act provides that in computing the net income of a nonresident for the purpose of arriving at his taxable income, his deductions of losses are restricted and allowed only if, and to the extent, that they are connected with income arising from sources within the State of New York, and that deductions allowed to residents of New York are not so restricted.

"Under Section 362 a glaring discrimination, from the viewpoint of citizens of this State, is that provision of the act which provides that specific exemptions from this tax (amounting to $1,000 in the case of a single person, $2,000 in the case of a married person, and $200 in the case of dependents under 18 years of age) shall be allowed to residents of the State of New York.

Cites Constitution.

"Such unwarranted discriminations against residents of New Jersey are, in my opinion, clearly illegal and violative of the provisions of Sec. 4, Art. 2 of the Federal Constitution, which reads as follows:

The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several States.

"What are the privileges and immunities to which the citizens of each State are entitled? In the case of Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 418, in construing this paragraph of the Constitution, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

Beyond doubt, those words are words of very comprehensive meaning, but it will be sufficient to say that the clause plainly and unmistakably secures and protects the right of a citizen of one State to pass into another State of the Union for the purpose of engaging in lawful commerce, trade or business, without molestation; to acquire personal property, to take and hold real estate, to maintain actions in the courts of the State, and to be exempt from any higher taxes or excises than are imposed by the State upon its own citizens."

"Such discriminations as are made by the New York act also clearly contravene the provisions of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, which reads as follows:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States, and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States. Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Other Authorities.

This protection of the Federal Constitution has in effect been held to be a limitation upon the powers of the individual States. In the case of the County of Santa Clara vs. Southern Pacific Railroad, 18 Fed. Rep. 385, the Court said:

The Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution in declaring that no State shall deny any person within its jurisdiction "equal protection of the laws" imposes a limitation upon the exercise of all the powers of the State which can touch an individual or his property, including that of taxation. The power of oppression by taxation without this process of law is not thus permitted; nor the power by taxation to deprive any person of the equal protection of the laws.

"While it is apparent to all of us that these discriminations affect a very large number of our citizens, the wrongful imposition of these taxes does not in the legal sense of the term involve the question of public right. It is on the contrary a circumstance in which private interests are infringed. An action to redress the wrong would be an action to redress a private wrong as distinguished from a public wrong. . . .

"A resident of the State of New Jersey illegally subjected to this tax is the proper person to litigate the question of the legality of the tax imposed upon him. No wrong is done our State as a State. Yet while our State, as such, may not be a moving party to test the validity of the tax proposed to be levied and collected, still, inasmuch as tens of thousands of our citizens will come within the provisions of said law, I am of opinion that, as the head of the Law Department of our State, I should cause such proceedings to be instituted as may bee proper to test the validity of said tax.

"As no action in this matter can be brought in our State courts, where I could appear as the attorney of record, I should be authorized to associate with me eminent counsel of New York, and to incur such expenses in litigation as may be necessary in the premises."

Load Last Food Ships To Go To Europe; Relief Organization Sent 2,486,230 Tons

The last shipment of food supplies from America to the starving countries of Europe through the American Relief Administration, 42 Broadway, are now being loaded. This supply and what is now in transit are believed to be sufficient to carry Europe through until the next harvest. The total amount of supplies distributed by the administration from Dec. 1 to May 30 was 2,486,230 tons, comprising 512 shiploads, worth $835,175,000.

Although the time is fast approaching for the official termination of its activities, the American Relief Administration announces that it will remain in Europe for some time to continue the supervision of the child-feeding bureaus now furnishing daily supplementary meals to 4,000,000 children until individual nations themselves are able to take over active charge.

The administration announced yesterday that no further deposits would be accepted by the Exchange Department for remittance to Europe after tomorrow. Since the latter part of April, when the American Relief Administration received from the Federal Reserve Board the exclusive privilege of handling exchange transactions for Finland, Poland, Czechoslovakia, German Austria, Jugoslavia, Rumania, Serbia, and Germany, there has been transmitted to these countries nearly $7,000,000. This total sum was made up of many thousand individual remittances, from a few dollars up to several thousands, and has served to establish communication between American banks and their corresponding banks in Europe after four years of isolation.

Independent telegraph and wireless service between all of the principal capitals under direct control of the operators employed by the Relief Administration as recently arranged involved the exclusive use of more than 5,000 miles of telegraph wires in Europe. This was necessitated by the complete disintegration of communications of all descriptions throughout Europe during the war. Courier service is now running regularly all over the Continent owing to the failure of postal service abroad. In carrying foodstuffs to Europe enemy shipping to the amount of a million and half tons, obtained in exchange for food, was used for this purpose as well as American ships.

SEES A NEW ERA FOR THE MINISTRY

NEW VIEW OF SPIRITUALITY

Modern Church Demands Pastors Polish the Dulled Consciences in Pews, He Says.

"A new era for the ministry was predicted by Dr. Earle B. Cross in a statement issued yesterday from the headquarters of the National Committee of the Northern Baptist Laymen. Dr. Cross, who is a member of the committee, said the present tendency is toward greater independence and the day of the subservient minister is passing.

"Business men who used the church as a cloak are going to learn they can't get away with their old high-handed methods," he said. "They who go to church on Sunday and worship the mighty dollar the rest of the week will not be able to dictate to the clergyman, order him to tone down his sermon and not mention things distasteful to them.

"'Spirituality' is an amulet worn by people who are afraid of God. It is an idol of men who have created God in their own image. True spirituality has calloused hands and a healthy appetite. It laughs, plays and gives every man a square deal. When in these tragedy-sobered days a spiritual leader speaks from the pulpit, worship puts off its frippery and kneels in contrition, respectable sins blush for shame, and million-dollar thieves with fancy alibis get up and leave the room.

"The ministers are still driving on a steep grade. There is a bunch of folk who object to the use of 'cut-outs.' More and more the mufflers are being scrapped, and sinners comfortably asleep by the way are being roused to moral action. It is absurd for folk in the pew to dictate to the man they have called to the pulpit. They are demanding more in the way of qualifications and equipment these days; and after they have chosen they submit to his advice and prescriptions with the grace of a business man in the hands of an expert systematizer.

"Two things are vital in a minister—a whole-hearted devotion to humanity, born of a whole-souled allegiance to Jesus, and an A No. 1 training. In the presence of such a man the average church advisory board is like a crowd around an expert chauffeur who is dealing with a balky machine. By the way, many an advisory board fits out its minister with a 'flivver' and worn-out batteries, and then fires him because he doesn't get results.

"The minister deals with moral problems of the now and here. If he talks about heaven it ought to be as a man talks about his bank account, for the only way in which he can collect anything in the future life is by making spiritual investments in the here and now. What the modern church demands of its ministers is that they shall have keen consciences and use them to polish up the edges of dulled consciences in the pews by vigorous tongue and pen.

"The church of this new day will reduce its 'restful worship' to a minimum. It will expect to wriggle and squirm under the electric current of its spiritual physician as he massages and vibrates their souls out of tension into normal flexibility. To use a very old phrase, a true minister will give his cure 'hearts of flesh for hearts of stone.'"

DAY WOULD CONSERVE ICE.

Commissioner Gives Prices and Profits and Suggests Remedies.

Market Commissioner Jonathan C. Day, yesterday submitted sugestions, for ice conservation and a protest against profiteering to the Mayor's Committee on Ice. Dr. Day says artificial ice costs from 4½ to 45 cents per 300-pound cake to manufacture, that these cakes are sold to retailers at 75 cents each at the plant, and are retailed at 50 cents per 100 pounds, at a profit of 100 per cent. Some of these dealers sell 600 cakes a week, he says, with a profit of $750 a week with no overhead charges but cellar rent of from $5 to $10 a month and horse and wagon charges of from $20 to $25 a month.

Dr. Day sugests that apartment house janitors might take the place of the iceman in supplying the families in their houses at 35 cents per hundred, saving the consumer 15 cents per hundred and giving the janitors 10 cents per hundred for handling.

Dr. Day suggests a priority list should ice became very scarce. He would first serve hospitals, then charitable institutions, householders, hotels, restaurants, food producers, soda fountains and lastly, cafes. The commissioner also suggests that ice dealers be licensed.

EXPECT MORE JOBS THAN MEN SOON

Re-employment Committee Asks Employers to Take Men Now to Meet Future Needs.

TRADES FOR SERVICE MEN

Suggested That Those Without Skilled Occupation Accept Apprenticeships.

Believing that there is going to be a scarcity of labor in this city within a few months, the Re-employment Committee of New York City for Soldiers, Sailors, and Marines is urging employers to begin now to train new men to meet conditions that are expected to be brought about by the end of the war, according to announcement made last night by Alfred L. Smith, Executive Secretary of the Re-employment Bureau.

The prediction that there will shortly be a scarcity of labor is not new, as that opinion had been expressed several times before by persons in close touch with the situation. But so far as known the Re-employment Bureau is the first to inaugurate a campaign to point out to employers the need for hiring men now so as to be prepared for this new situation, and, incidentally to provide immediate employment for thousands of former service men. This endeavor is not confined to employers, Mr. Smith explained, but the committee is also impressing upon applicants the wisdom of taking jobs that offer little more than a living at the start but which give promise. Men of no skilled occupation are being induced to take jobs as apprentices so that when a few months hence there is a marked demand for skilled labor, as the Bureau expects, these apprentices can fill up the gaps.

J. H. Tregoe, Secretary and Treasurer of the National Association of Credit Men, which is said to have the largest membership of any commercial organization in the country, shares the belief that there is going to be a shortage of labor in the not distant future. This association recently made an exhaustive study of the labor situation, and issued a report declaring that men were soon going to be scarce.

Mr. Smith said it was being explained to the men who apply for work at the bureau why former soldiers, sailors, and marines who have no particular occupation should learn trades. The men are interviewed by vocational guidance advisers assigned to the bureau by such organizations as the Y. M. C. A., National Catholic War Council, War Camp Community Service, National League for Women's Service, Salvation Army, Red Cross, and Jewish Welfare Board, which, under the auspices of the Merchants' Association and eighty employers' organizations, are supplying the funds to support the bureau.

J. H. Tetreet of the Vocational Guidance Division, said last night that while his department was an innovation in the Re-employment Bureau it had demonstrated its value since its inception. "Experienced men are not going to be available very long," he said. "Approximately must be trained now. Employers should look ahead. Awaiting their call we have here the finest set of men ever released from military and naval service. These men have had from six months to two years training in the best disciplinary organization the world. They have been taught to obey, to use their initiative, and, as a result, have from 50 to 100 per cent. more possibilities of success than the man who was not with the colors. We hope that employers will take advantage of the opportunity to hire men who only ask for a fighting chance to make good. These boys are not seeking charity. They want work to which they are entitled, for without these lads there would have been no independence for the business men of this nation."

During the last week the newly created Division for Wounded and Disabled Men has obtained places for about a dozen soldiers, sailors, or marines. All told, more than 6,000 soldiers, sailors, and marines have been placed by the Re-employment Bureau to date. About 11,500 former service men have applied for jobs. More than 10,000 men have been interviewed and advised. More than 13,000 men have been referred to positions. Since the bureau opened more than 18,000 places have been open to its registrants.

Plans for enlarging the scope of the bureau are now being considered by the committee. A series of free lectures, evening courses, personnel conferences, and other innovations are to be considered at the next meeting of the committee.

REFORMS IN PANAMA.

Commission Will Recommend a Change in the Land Laws.

PANAMA, June 28.—The American commission headed by Dr. Clarence J. Owens, which has been making a survey of Panama's economic resources, is sailing today for New York on the steamer Colon.

The report of the commission recommends revision of the Panama land laws and establishment of a farm loan bank. It is understood this report will be used in an effort to float a loan in the United States.

Belisario Porras, President of Panama, announced today he intended to open a Pan American College at Panama on Jan. 1. This institution will offer instruction in international commerce.

STRAUS DISCUSSES ROOT AND ARTICLE X.

Says Proposed Elimination Would Be an Amendment of Treaty That Equals Rejection.

NO COMPULSION IN LEAGUE

Reminds Ex-Senator That Action Must Be Unanimous and That "Advise" Is Strongest Word.

In a statement entitled "Mr. Root and Article X.—His Conflicting Views," made public yesterday, Oscar S. Straus, who was Chairman of the League to Enforce Peace, at Paris, declared that Elihu Root's proposal contained in his letter to Senator Lodge was entirely at variance with his amendments as proposed in his letter to the Chairman of the Republican National Committee. Mr. Straus said that Mr. Root's suggestion "may temporarily serve the purpose of some of our Senators who may prefer this so-called negative acceptance to an affirmative rejection of the Treaty of Peace. The formula is only different; the result is the same."

Mr. Straus said that the six amendments proposed by Mr. Root in his letter to Mr. Hays were to a considerable extent embodied in the revised covenant. Passing on to Article X., concerning the preservation "as against external aggression, the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the League," Mr. Straus said that while in his letter of March 31 Mr. Root advised the retention of Article X., in his letter of June 22 to Senator Lodge he advised striking it out.

"I think Mr. Root will agree with me that while a treaty may be accepted with reservations explanatory of the understanding of the language of clauses of the treaty, it cannot be accepted by eliminating parts of such a treaty," continued Mr. Straus. "Such elimination amounts to a distinct amendment, and unless the amendment is adopted by all the parties that enter into the Treaty it is a rejection of the Treaty by the United States. In this instance this is emphasized by the fact that Article X. is perhaps the most important article of the covenant, without which the covenant would have very little value and would fail to accomplish its main purpose.

"Unless the members of the League will undertake to protect each other against 'external aggression' by each other, as well as on the part of nations not members of the League, what security will the nations have against such aggression as Germany and Austria made? Therefore, for the United States to accept the Treaty on condition that this article be stricken out amounts to an affirmative rejection instead of a negative rejection.

"Mr. Root does not object to our adopting the economic sanctions provided for in Article XVI., by which the nations agree that if any member of the League resorts to war in disregard of its covenants it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the members of the League, who undertake to prohibit all intercourse and, in fact, establish an economic boycott against the State breaking the covenant.

"Article X. does not compel us to go any further than this, provided Congress determines, as it has a full right to do, that such a boycott, if imposed and continued, will prevent threatened or put an end to external aggression, for the article provides that in case of such aggression, or in case of any great or danger of such aggression, the Council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

"In other words, the council is not permitted to prescribe, to determine, to order, or direct what means shall be employed in order to fulfill the obligation, but only 'shall advise.' That is to say, in the final analysis each nation member of the League is free to follow that advice, or adopt such other means, as provided for in Article XVI., which in its judgment will be adequate to accomplish the result.

"The word 'advise' in this article is used in the same sense as the word 'recommend' is used in the second clause of Article XVI., which provides: 'It shall be the duty of the council in such case to recommend to the several Governments concerned what effective military or naval forces the members of the League shall severally contribute to the armaments of forces to be used to protect the covenants of the League.' In other words, the council does not prescribe, order, or direct, but its duty only is to 'recommend.'

"It will be recalled that it was precisely this sort of an agreement which Austria-Hungary refused to make regarding Serbia prior to the commencement of the war. It refused to make a declaration regarding the political independence of Serbia. Any power which would be unwilling to covenant against its own aggressions would not be a fit member of any league of nations.

"It will be observed that Article X. is limited by the words 'as against external aggression.' In respect to any other case there is no covenant. An internal revolution may overthrow a power; a colony or province may revolt and set up a government of its own; one country may make voluntary cession to another, but with none of these has the Article any concern. For the covenant to operate there must not only be aggression, but external aggression.

"The idea of a dispute in the Balkans, for example, requiring the United States to take an army to keep the peace, is fantastic and far-fetched to say the least. No Balkan State nor any combination of Balkan States could withstand the economic pressure which the great powers would bring to bear, without firing a shot.

"The greatest value of the covenant is its reserve power; the knowledge and fact that the States of the world are in union against a would-be aggressor will in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred prevent and defeat aggression, without the need of exercising that power.

"From the point of view of the United States, it must be remembered that the advice of the council in any particular case to use armed force must be unanimous, and as the United States is permanently represented as one of the nine powers on the council, the concurrence of the United States would be necessary before the council could give even advice in regard to the use of such war power. And even when such advice is given, the war-making departments of the various countries will have it in their power to decide whether the advice should be followed or not. In the case of the United States, it would clearly be a question for Congress, and it would be for Congress in the extreme case to determine whether the obligation should be fulfilled by declaration of war or whether it could be effectively fulfilled otherwise.

"I am sure no one appreciates more than Mr. Root that the covenant, even if all of his suggestions were capable of adoption, would as time goes on require amendment just as the Constitution of the United States and all other constitutions have required amendments to correct defects and adapt them to changed conditions. In recognition of this fact, he says in his last communication that the United States should insist upon a revision of the League covenant and that the changed circumstances will then permit material improvement.

"We must not lose sight of the fact that the covenant is necessarily built upon compromises and concessions made by the several nations to achieve the great end in view, and I am quite confident in saying that all the nations recognize that the instrument is imperfect, and does not fully register their separate aims and desires. It must, however, be regarded as the best common denominator of the idiosyncrasies of the thirty-two nations and self-governing dominions, including the neutral States who took part in the conference. Why should we alone be unwilling to start with this common denominator and give the covenant a chance to develop and be perfected by amendments as time runs on, as has been our own Constitution?

"Insistence upon the elimination of Article X. at this stage I cannot conceive to have any other effect than to prevent the United States from becoming a member of the League. Several of the foremost representatives of the great powers have expressed themselves that there can be no effective League without the United States. Our country has a long line of traditions for the settlement of international differences by peaceful means. Not to enter into the League, the main purpose of which is to substitute the arbitrament of law for war, would certainly be a more direct violation of American traditions than the dicta of the fathers regarding European entangling alliances.

"The League of Nations can, of course, be formed without the United States, and doubtless will be, as provided for by the last article of the treaty when Germany and three other powers sign, but in that event nations who would otherwise doubtless join the league will stay out and, instead of being a league of nations, it is most likely to lead to group alliances. To use a largely abused term, the psychological opportunity of translating the victory won in war into an adequate victory for a greater security for peace will be lost, and ours will be the burden of responsibility for imperiling and defeating the people's hopes and the world's desire."

KONENKAMP HERE TODAY.

Head of Commercial Telegraphers Will Address Strikers.

Percy Thomas, International Deputy President of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union and leader of the local strikers, announced yesterday that Sylvester J. Konenkamp, President of the union, would arrive in this city today. Soon after he arrives he will address the strikers in the Rand School, 7 East Fifteenth Street.

Mr. Konenkamp spent yesterday in conference with Frank Morrison, Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, at Atlantic City. It was said they discussed the call of the special committee from the Federation that called upon Postmaster General Burleson and asked recognition of the telegraphers' organization. No announcement has been made as to the results of that visit. Mr. Konenkamp is expected to disclose what happened this afternoon. There has been no change in the local strike.

75,000 TO CAMP IN PARK.

Interstate Commission Has New Facilities for This Season.

The Palisades Interstate Park Commission will be able this Summer to furnish vacation grounds to 75,000 persons, according to an announcement made yesterday. These camps lie between Tuxedo and Bear Mountain, N. Y., and will be in full operation by July 1. In making public the plans, George W. Perkins, President of the commission, said yesterday:

"We are entering the largest camp year in the history of the park. Our construction force has been busy throughout the Winter providing facilities for persons in institutions who get an average of ten days each out of doors. These camps are open to charitable societies, churches, Y. W. C. A., social settlements, and similar groups. For most of these organizations food is furnished from Bear Mountain Inn, where it is cooked and then sent in heat retaining receptacles to the camps. It is estimated that 150,000 meals will be served in this manner this Summer."

Some of the organizations to which camps have been assigned for the season are: New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, Brooklyn Industrial School for Destitute Orphans, Jacob A. Riis Social Settlement, Big Brother Movement, Greenwich House, Negro Fresh Air Committee, Yorkville Social Centre, Young Women's Christian Association, Boy Scouts of America, Children's Aid Society, Manhattan Council of Girl Scouts, and several church and social service agencies.

6,995 TO BECOME CITIZENS.

Increase in Number of Aliens Taking Out First Papers.

More aliens applied to the New York County Naturalization Bureau for citizenship during the first quarter of the current year than during the first quarter of 1914. County Clerk Schneider said yesterday that in the county there were more than 300,000 aliens eligible for citizenship, and that the present activity among the aliens in search of citizenship indicated that the percentage of all aliens would be greatly reduced.

"During the first three months of 1914," said Mr. Schneider, "the bureau issued a total of 6,418 papers to applicants for citizenship, and during the first three months of this year the total number was 6,995. The increase on the face is small, but it must be remembered that practically the entire number this year may be figured upon as reducing the total number of aliens in the county."

Mr. Schneider said that the steady increase of population and the decrease in aliens would have a tendency to induce all those who are not citizens to set about getting their papers without delay. He pointed out that there had been no immigration since January, 1915, and that the proposed new immigration laws may contain provisions restricting liberty of action in naturalization. Concerning the prediction of extensive immigration of Germans and Austrians, Mr. Schneider said:

"Both Germany and Austria probably will demand a bond from every one leaving those countries, guaranteeing the payment of a tax to help meet the tremendous war debts that will have to be paid. Efforts doubtless will be made to prevent desirable persons from going elsewhere. It will be impossible for us to prevent the entrance into this country of any white persons."

NAVY AIRMEN TELL OF OCEAN FLIGHT

FIND COMPASS FAULTY

SAILED PLANE ON WAVES

Commanders Also See Need for Fuller Information on Meteorological Conditions.

Two lessons which the crews of the seaplanes of the NC fleet have brought back with them relative to transocean flying are, first, that the radio compass with its directional wireless means of plotting the position of the plane must be a little more fully developed, and, second, that meteorolgoical conditions, especially near the surface of the sea, must be known beyond a doubt by the pilots. These two facts were brought out yesterday in interviews with Lieut. Commander Albert Cushing Read, commander of the NC-4, the first heavier than air machine to cross the ocean, and Lieut. Commander John H. Towers, commander in chief of the NC fleet, whose craft, the NC-3, was forced to land in the sea off the Azores before it reached the harbor.

"It wasn't the fog and it wasn't the storm that stopped the NC-3 from reaching her destination," declared Lieut. Commander Towers. "It was the fact that our radio compass failed even to register at the distance we expected it would. Thus we were unable to tell where we were or to plot any course, and had to land in the ocean. Once down, the storm made it impossible for us to rise again. Lieut. Commander Bellinger in the NC-1 had exactly the same experience I did with his compass, only he wasn't so fortunate in getting his ship to safety."

It was the first detailed interview that the two aviators have granted since landing in New York on Friday, and the story they told, one of splendid success and the other of a failure that was in its way just as splendid, is probably unexcelled in the annals of the American Navy.

Lieut. Commander Read is a slender, clean-cut man, not over five feet three or four inches in heighth. There is cool determination written in every line of his face with its straight thin lips and aquiline nose. His manner with questioners is diffident and at the same time self-possessed. There is not one bit of conceit in him at what he has accomplished. He answers questions precisely if briefly, and is honestly anxious to tell what he can of his trip for the sake of the people of this nation whose Navy Department sent him across the ocean.

At one question only did he depart from an almost official way of giving his answers, and that was when he was asked: "Were you happy, Commander, when you saw Lisbon and knew that you were the first aviator to get across?"

The most boyish sort of smile came over his face and his blue eyes twinkled as he replied:

"I'll say I was. I didn't care after that whether they had a destroyer along the whole route."

The first question asked him and the answer he gave demonstrate as clearly as anything the calibre of the man. The query was in regard to the report that the NC-4 was the hoodoo ship of the fleet and it had not been expected to make the flight successfully.

Undaunted by Engine Trouble.

"I was commander of that ship," he said, "and there was no one going to tell me that my ship was not going to be successful."

"However," he continued, "when we landed at Chatham, Mass., because of engine trouble, I feared everything was over for us for a while. It didn't seem possible that we could get fixed up and rejoin the rest of the fleet at Trepassey in time to go across. I was pretty low in my mind, but, as is the custom in the navy, we went ahead with the job at hand and got our engines repaired as quickly as possible. You know at Chatham we had to change one motor. Then, before we had finished this even, we got word that Lieut. Commander Towers was held up by the weather and that we had a chance to catch up with him. I have learned since that the navy was going to keep the patrol boats out, so I guess I would have made the trip whether the rest had gone on or not."

The aviator said that at Trepassey they changed the low-compression motor put in at Chatham for a high-compression one, with which each aircraft was fitted. The latter, he said, delivered more power and used less gas. He also spoke very highly of the Liberty motor which drove the planes.

"When we got up at Trepassey, the NC-4 got off first," continued Lieut. Commander Read. "It was reported we were on our way, but that was not the fact. We were trying our new motor, and so we circled around the harbor three times, and then waited for Lieut. Commander Towers, our commanding officer, to make the start on the long trip.

"The voyage of the NC-4 was very monotonous on the whole. It's a fact that I believe the science of aviation will benefit more from the experience of the men in the NC-1 and the NC-3. We flew along steadily and comfortably until we hit the fog bank early Saturday morning, the day we landed at Horta. We had with us sandwiches, coffee in thermos bottles, and navy emergency rations. A curious thing is that we were not a bit hungry. I ate exactly three sandwiches while I was in the air all the way from Rockaway to Plymouth, England. I smoked almost all the time, though, when I could get shelter from the wind."

The officer told of how the plane had driven straight into the heart of a fog bank four or five hours before the trip ended.

Went Ahead Blindly.

"It was impossible then for us to get any reckoning of our position, and we had to go ahead more or less blindly. Every once in a while I would try to get a sight when the mist grew lighter, but it was a hit-or-miss sort of a proposition. However, from comparing notes later, I find that the fogbank we encountered was light in comparison with the clouds that enveloped the NC-4 and the NC-1.

"Why this was so I am not able to explain. Call it luck if you want to. The NC-4 was south of me and the NC-1 was approximately fifty miles to the north. Both planes were behind the NC-4. Perhaps my luck is due to the fact that the pilots in our ship decided to go a little faster than those in the others. We encountered mighty rough weather, and a plane is easier to handle when she is moving fast, so we got a little ahead.

"Anyhow, we were driving along in the mist and trusting that sometime, somewhere, we were going to get a glimpse of clear sky or land that would give us our position, when the clouds lifted a little and I saw land below me. You can imagine that, after the hours of uncertainty, we were all tremendously glad to see that land. We were flying about 3,000 feet high at that time, and we headed down, landing off the Island of Fayal.

"I might have gone on to Ponta Delgada, but with the fog and the storm that was blowing up I decided to come down where I was. My pilots were a bit worried over the weather conditions, but my engineers didn't seem to trouble themselves in the least."

Favors Four Engines.

Lieut. Commander Read said that the NC-4, with certain repairs, would be ready to fly back, if the navy had so ordered, as the long trip had not affected her in the least. In answer to questions, he said that he thought if such a flight had been attempted it would have been by the Azores, and not direct from Ireland to Newfoundland. The aviator expressed himself in favor of four-engined craft for a transocean trip, and not one, as was the case with Hawker's Sopwith, nor two, as in the Vimy machine that Alcock flew. Also he agreed with the latter's assertion that the best machine for flying across the ocean was a flying boat.

"It gives you a mighty lot of confidence," said the navy man, "to realize you've got something that will float between you and the sea."

He declared from the experiences of the NC fleet that he thought any transatlantic commercial aviation in the near future would be done by dirigibles and not heavier-than-air machines.

"In my report to the Navy Department," said Lieut. Commander Read, "I will, of course, discuss many things that we learned from this trip. Naturally, I am not in a position to divulge that information before I give it to my superior officers. I will say this, however, that flying across the Atlantic Ocean is no sure thing yet for an airplane, although I believe commercial aviation over the ocean will be fairly common pretty soon by the big dirigibles.

"One thing is of vast importance, and that is that your weather reports must be accurate and extensive. Otherwise you run into fog and storms, and the trip changes from a fairly safe and easy one to an extremely hazardous and uncomfortable undertaking."

The aviator said that on the way across his pilots had been able to lie down and doze a little, worn by the strain of constant work at the controls. They relieved each other every three-quarters of an hour or so, he said. While the NC-4 was at Horta, he said, he thought that his comrades in the rest of the fleet were lost. A radio message was received there at this time from Lieut. Commander Bellinger which read, "S. O. S. Sinking." That message, it turned out, was a mistake. What the NC-1 really sent was, "S. O. S. Landing."

Denies Ill Feeling.

"There is just one thing I would like to get before you," said Lieut. Commander Read as the interview closed, "and that is in regard to newspaper reports I saw in Paris to the effect that there has been any bad feeling between Lieut. Commander Towers and myself. You can say for me that it is all silly rot, and that the person who started that story deserves a nice soft place in an institution for the feeble-minded."

Lieut. Commander Read is staying at the Commodore Hotel until tonight, when he leaves for Washington to make his report to the Navy Department. Lieut. Commander Towers, who will go to Washington at the same time, is at the Vanderbilt, as is Lieut. Commander Bellinger.

In describing what happened to the NC-3, Lieut. Commander Towers declared that he was as much in the dark as Lieut. Commander Read as to why the two ships, the NC-3 and NC-1, encountered so much heavier fog than did the NC-4. The fog that enveloped the NC-3, he said, was as thick as a blanket, and so, after flying in it for five hours, he decided to come down for an observation.

"You see, the course of the fleet lay between the Island of Corvo and the Island of Flores," said the officer. "That is, we were due to pass south of the former and north of the latter. The NC-1 went just north of Corvo as it turned out, while both the NC-4 and my ship went south of Flores. I was a bit south of Read.

"I expected to 'make land' at Corvo, and when I didn't, or, rather, when I had been flying along for hours in a dense mist without any sights at all, I got in conference with my pilots and engineers. It turned out that both Lieut. Commander Bellinger and myself made the same reasoning. Our gasoline was running low, and, since there was not enough fuel to do any experimenting on, we came down to the surface of the sea. Our respective landing times were as follows: The NC-1 came down north of Corvo at 1:10 P. M., Greenwich time; the NC-4 in Horta at 1:18, and the NC-3 in the sea southeast of Flores at 1:30.

"I can't imagine how we happened to find the fog so thick. We tried every altitude, from 5,000 feet to 50 feet, and the result was the same. A half hour or so before I landed I did get a sight of the sky, but I didn't trust my calculations, so slight it was. I wish to heaven I had now, for these calculations were practically correct."

Lieut. Commander Towers is an entirely different personality from Lieut. Commander Read. Where the other is slender he is sturdy. He is also much more boyish than the commander of the NC-4, although when he described the fifty-four-hour battle with the sea that the crew of the NC-3 waged before they brought their ship safely to Ponta Delgada, as one of the sailors said at the time, "a little disfigured but still in the ring," his jaw set in a fashion that made it easy to understand how it was that the navy placed him in command of the NC fleet.

"You see, when we came down there was a storm brewing and a bad one," he said. "We didn't know it in the air and when we landed on the surface of the water the size of the waves and the velocity of the wind came as a complete surprise. There had been no storm expected, according to the weather reports we got before we left Trepassey. I cannot estimate the force of the wind, but at Horta it was said to equal sixty to ninety miles an hour. Naturally we had no chance to get back off the water after we made our landing.

"The shock of the landing threw the few sandwiches we had left out of the rack and into the bilge water and oil in the bottom of the compartment, so that we had to fall back on navy emergency rations. However, the nervous strain we were under prevented any of us from getting very hungry.

"I tell you that on Sunday, after we had been on the water twenty-four hours and had been thrown this way and that by the wind and the waves, we were about ready to give up for lost. Our ship had begun to break before the blows of the waves, and things looked mighty black.

"At first we sent wireless from the surface of the sea. We had two wireless sets, you understand, a small one that was set in the blast of the big propeller shaft, the air from which started the propeller in the small radio generator, as well as the big one in use while we were in the air. It was the small one we had to work when we were on the ocean. As things turned out, though, they were too busy hunting for us to hear our faint calls, and we soon stopped the engine that was driving the propeller.

"It then became a terrible battle. We learned, after a fashion, to sail the big seaplane. That is, we turned it stern foremost to the waves, and by manipulating the controls got the wings and the rudders to act as sails. We got pretty good at this after twelve or fifteen hours of it, and learned to take advantage of lulls in the storm to work our way in the direction of Ponta Delgada. On Monday afternoon we were seen from a marine battery on a hill on the island, and a destroyer came out. We were then near the harbor, and, starting our motor, 'taxied' in under our own power."

Lieut. Commander Towers said that the world had many lessons to learn from the flight of the NC fleet, which, he declared, would be of inestimable service to aviation everywhere.

Must Improve Compass.

"First of all, it wasn't the fog and it wasn't the storm that kept the NC-3 from reaching her desination," he said. "Our radio compass failed even to operate at the distance we expected it would and we had to come down to the surface of the sea to get our bearings. That beat us, as the storm made it impossible to get up again.

"Now, if we have learned anything from this flight, we have learned that the radio compass is absolutely essential to transocean trips, and also that it must be further developed. A radio compass enables the pilot to get his exact location from the wireless messages coming in. Ours were set for the distance of 125 miles, which is in itself far too little to depend upon for an ocean crossing. However, as a matter of fact, we found ours of use only at a distance of ten miles, so that we had to come right up to a patrol destroyer to get our position.

"This was due, as we learned, to faulty wiring, which allowed the noise of the motors in the receiver drowning out everything but a very powerful message. We could have fixed this at Rockaway but we wanted to start on the navy schedule which had been laid down for us and the delay would have compelled us to wait a month. Remember also that we got no report of the storm brewing so that we expected fair weather.

"In this connection, I would say that another point gained from our experience was the necessity of knowing clearly just what sort of weather conditions must be faced in the trip over. By that I mean the conditions near the surface of the water, for that is what will bother a pilot most.

"We could have ridden out the storm, and the fog itself would not have worried us if we could have plotted our position. That is why I say the development of the radio compass is all important in transocean flying. In the first leg of our trip to Newfoundland we ran into a storm that was as bad if not worse than the one over the Azores, but we rode it out without difficulty because we were able in the absence of fog to keep our course pretty straight."

Lieut. Commander Towers was of the same opinion as Lieut. Commander Read in regard to the feasibility of any transatlantic commercial flying in heavier than air machines in the near future. He said that he thought a Pacific flight would be tried and accomplished within a year.

DEATH HOUSE SUITS HAMBY

Tells Warden Everything Is Very Nice and That He Slept Well.

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, June 28.—Gordon Fawcett Hamby, the Brooklyn bank murderer, told Warden Edward V. Brophy of Sing Sing that he was delighted to meet him when they rere introduced in the Death House today. Hamby puffed a cigarette during the interview, told the Warden he had slept like a baby throughout his first night as a doomed man, and that he found everything very nice and entirely to his satisfaction and liking. "Nothing ever bothers me at all," said Hamby. "The sooner the end comes, the better. It's immaterial to me. I'd sooner have it over with than to have all this fuss. This place is nice. Everything here is very nice. There isn't anything that I want that I haven't got here."

"Is there any legal effort being made in your behalf by any one?" asked the Warden.

Hamby reiterated what he had said before about his determination to go to the electric chair without an appeal being taken to the higher courts. "There is no effort being made," he added. "Why should there be? No, I'm not going to the trouble."

GOOD THAT COMES EVEN OUT OF WAR

HAS DEVELOPED MEDICINE

Says It Has Taught Value of Thrift, Removed Class Spirit, and Fostered Patriotism.

The good that has come out of war was the subject of a talk which Major Gen. Leonard Wood gave to the students of George Washington University in Washington recently. Throughout the world, General Wood said, people thought only of the terrible sufferings that marked the progress of the great war. But, he added, terrible as were those sufferings, the fact remained that much good had come to America and the Allies as a direct result.

"War," said General Wood, "is not all loss. Although we paid heavily, we have learned many things which will be of benefit to us and to mankind for all time. In the war with Spain we largely developed and perfected the control of malaria. We took up and carried through to success the study of the transmission of yellow fever. We learned how to control it, and we made the tropics and the fever ridden zones safe against yellow fever for all time.

"In doing this, we made the building of the Panama Canal possible. The Canal was built on a sanitary foundation. This can be said without in any way detracting from the splendid work of our engineers. The French were enterprising, clever, courageous and resourceful, but the death rate from yellow fever and malaria was so tremendous that demoralization took place in the working forces to such an extent that the work could not be carried on.

"The credit in doing away with yellow fever was principally due to Major Walter Reed and, to a lesser degree, to Doctors Carroll, Lazear and Agramonte, his assistants. Doctor Carlos Finlay of Cuba had done much in the way of preliminary study of the mosquito as a carrier, but he had not arrived at definite conclusions or put the results of his study to practical use. In doing away with yellow fever, we were able to do away with those great periodical quarantines which tied up business throughout the South, costing us hundreds of millions of dollars, sometimes annually, and many thousands of lives.

Smallpox and Typhoid Banished.

"Incidentally, in our occupation of tropical possessions, we instituted thorough and careful vaccination, thereby doing away with the hideous losses among the population from smallpox. We also established sound methods of sanitation, better hospital facilities, better methods of caring for the sick and infirm. The policies carried out in the West Indies were followed up in the Philippines. The terror of malaria was done away with. Tens of thousands of lives were saved; most of these results coming from sanitary precautions necessary to safeguard the military population.

"When disturbances began to occur along the Mexican border it was found necessary to protect our troops, to make anti-typhoid vaccination obligatory. Here, again, was a by-product if not of war, of a military situation which made it necessary to do thorough and radical work in the line of preventive medicine. The result has been that for a number of years there was not a death from typhoid in the army, and typhoid was demonstrated to be a controllable disease.

"During the great war from which we are just emerging preventive medicine has made wonderful advances. Wherever typhoid prophylaxis has been carefully and systematically carried out and proper serum provided typhoid has been absent. Tetanus no longer is a cause of death. So astounding have been the advances of preventive medicine and sound sanitation that vast armies have been maintained in excellent health under conditions which in former years would have soon rendered them ineffective and given a death rate which would have been appalling. Never before were such great armies assembled and maintained with so low a disability rate, under conditions of the most trying kind.

"Another by-product has been the wise reaction against the excessive use of alcohol and a better understanding of just what its true value is. Another valuable by-product has been the building up of thrift habits among our people and the demonstration of the possibilities in the way of saving, for prior to the war we were wasting enough to live on.

Revealed Nation's Weaknesses.

"One great by-product has been the division of our people into two groups, one very large and the other exceedingly small. The large one was made up of those working to help win the war. This amounted to virtually all our people. The other represented an element which we can dispense with.

"Another useful by-product of the war is a better knowledge of our people as to the real resources of the country for war. They know now what a great industrial nation can do in case of attack and how long it will take her to prepare. Our people have learned that those engaged in the manufacture of implements of agriculture and the machines of industry are not necessarily qualified to turn out high-speed airplanes or modern machines of war without training.

"A valuable lesson has been furnished by the great training camps, which brought forcibly to the attention of the people the heavy percentage of illiteracy, the alarmingly heavy percentage of physical disability unfitting men for hard military service, the large amount of vice diseases in certain racial groups, and the great amount of physical disability, deformity, and physical shortcomings, which generally could have been corrected by proper physical training in school.

"The war has also brought to our attention the need of having but one language in the schools below the high schools. If we wish to have real national solidarity our people should read, think, and speak the language of the best democracy, which is the language of the Declaration of Independence, of the Constitution, of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Cleveland, and Roosevelt.

"Assembling all the men in the great training camps also resulted in another very fine by-product of the war; that is, a better understanding of each other. The different elements of our population, men from different sections, the native-born and the newcomer, rich and poor, capital and labor, and the different racial groups—all have been thrown together in the training camps. They have learned to know and appreciate each other.

Made Men Better Citizens.

"This life has also resulted in the training of vast numbers of men in sanitation, personal and general; it has given them habits of neatness, promptness, thoroughness, and respect for law and order, for constituted authorities, and for the rights of others. It taught some four millions of our men the danger and folly of permitting our country to stand unprepared to assume promptly the responsibility of a great nation whose purpose is to keep peace and insure fair dealing among nations. It brought to millions of men and to millions of women the necesity for organization and preparation in time of peace. Wooden rifles and improvised rifles will soon be forgotten.

"The women and the youth of the various groups and classes of our population have been thrown together as earnest workers in the great war, to prepare for war and to provide our men with things necessary for their comfort and welfare. They will never stand apart in groups again—at least not as they did before—for each has learned to appreciate the good qualities of the other, and the cheap and shallow distinctions have been largely 'ironed out.'

"The war has given several millions of men an opportunity to cross the sea, and they have come home with a higher appreciation of their own country. They brought with them clear ideas as to the need of better roads. They have gained some familiarity with European customs and manners. They have an altogether broader view of the world and a better understanding of America's responsibilities.

"They will not fall so easily victims of the political faker. They will be better Americans for their experience overseas, and as the years go by and they digest what they have seen and gone through they will become a more and more dependable element and more and more a force for law and order and for sound government. They have learned to understand that the obligations of a great nation sometimes have to be discharged through the employment of force. They will be found keenly desirous of avoiding resort to war. What they have seen will convince them that the best way to avoid war is to be prepared against it. War exacts a heavy toll, and it is a hard road to learning and progress; but sad as it has been, we can feel that the world has come out of it with substantial gains in many directions.

"The war has been a great melting pot. The flames of war have fused all of these diverse elements of our population into a mass more homogeneous than ever before. Now let us stand together, shoulder to shoulder. There are many problems ahead of us, and we must do our level best to solve them successfully."

TELLS OF SAVINGS IN WAR EXPENSES

The Government saved $3,112,000,000 through reduction of prices on iron and steel, made effective by the Council of National Defense, according to a memorandum submitted by Grosvenor Clarkson, Director, to the House of Representatives. The savings on iron and steel were only part of those effected by his committee, according to Mr. Clarkson. He gave the following table as showing the savings through reduction of prices on iron and steel:

	Old Price.	New Price.	Saving.
Coke	$16	$6	$380,000,000
Bars	110	56	312,000,000
Shapes	120	60	180,000,000
Plates	226	63	640,000,000
Other products			600,000,000
Total			$3,112,000,000

The expenditures of the Council of Defense amounted to $1,500,000 up to May 1, 1919, including cost of carrying the War Industries Board for nearly a year. In one committee alone 45,000 contracts were handled in 200 days. Mr. Clarkson's report continues:

"In the case of copper the first purchase of 45,000,000 pounds at a price of approximately one-half the market price saved from 15 cents to 20 cents a pound, or from $6,750,000 to $9,000,000.

"On lumber, through negotiation with the manufacturers and the establishment of a co-operative bureau distributing system, the committee in charge established a price of $35 per thousand for ship timbers—timbers of such unusual size that only the largest and best equipped mills could produce them. One hundred schedules for 100 ships were then distributed among the mills and within thirty days the ship builders were paying $10 to $15 a thousand more for common timbers for ship ways than they were paying for the special timbers on which a price had been arranged by the committee. The evidence of the market price movement indicates a saving of $2,800,000 on 140,000,000 feet of these timbers at $20 a thousand.

"On the planning for the cantonments it has been variously estimated that from $500,000 to $1,000,000 on each National Army cantonment and $300,000 on each National Guard cantonment was saved by the work of the Emergency Construction Committee of the Council in changing the design of the buildings from small one-story to large two-story barracks.

"The market price of aircraft spruce at the beginning of the war was about $200 a thousand feet. Through the work of the Aircraft Production Board in adjusting prices with the producers, this figure was cut to $105 a thousand. Figured on the basis of last year's output of 30,000,000 feet, which is far below the amount which will be consumed during the current year at the new price, this represents a saving to the Government and to the Allies of $2,850,000.

"On preliminary training machines, which are the only kind of airplanes where a comparison can be made with production before the Aircraft Production Board was organized, a saving at the very start of $750 each on elementary training machines and of $900 on motors was secured through proper arrangement for production.

"The saving in wool cloth by the tailors to the trade through a reduction in the size of samples is over 220,000 yards. For the entire garment and clothing industry the saving resulting from smaller samples will be not less than 1,500,000 yards. The saving in cloth that is resulting from the reduction in yardage per garment will probably amount to at least 35,000,000 yards this year. These activities were under the Commercial Economy Board."

PERSHING DECORATES BROOKLYN HEROES

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The War Department today gave out a list of citations for the Distinguished Service Cross which contains the following names:

Capt. JEAN L. MEURISSE, French Army.—For extraordinary heroism in action near Chevillon, July 18. Acting as Liaison Officer with the 58th American Infantry, he showed marked personal courage under intense fire, setting an example of fearlessness to the officers and men with him. His knowledge of German artillery enabled him to advise methods of approach for our troops which were instrumental in preventing many casualties.

Lieut. ANDRE HALLIER, French Army.—For extraordinary heroism in action near Bois de Beuge, Oct. 3-4. After leading units of his battalion to their jumping off positions, he went out with one enlisted man and established an observation post in advance of the outpost line. He maintained this position despite intense artillery and machine gun fire, and sent back valuable information of the enemy, which was in a large measure responsible for the accuracy of our artillery fire. He displayed marked heroism and utter disregard for personal danger.

Second Lieut. CHARLES A. HUESSER, Machine Gun Co., 165th Infantry.—For extraordinary heroism in action near Landres-et-St. Georges, Oct. 14. Sent forward through terrific machine gun and artillery fire to take command of a platoon in the front lines, he displayed marked personal courage and heroism, inspiring the men serving under him by his example of fearlessness. During a heavy counterattack he showed great gallantry, coolly placing his guns where they could best fire upon the advancing enemy, although subjected the while to intense enemy fire. He succeeded in breaking up the enemy attack, and, although wounded by a machine gun bullet, refused to be evacuated until the enemy had withdrawn. Home address, Mrs. Mary M. Huesser, mother 2,725 Church Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Pvt. WILLIAM BEGLEY, (deceased,) Co. G, 308th Inf.—For extraordinary heroism in action near Charlevaux, Oct. 3-8. When his battalion was surrounded in the Argonne Forest Oct. 3-7, Pvt. Begley took charge of his squad, after the Corporal had been killed, and despite the fact that he was wounded in the arm by a machine gun bullet, encouraged his men through all the attacks of the four days until he was killed, Oct. 8. Home address, Mrs. Margaret Begley, 156 Huntington, Brooklyn, N. Y.

FINDS SERBIA'S NEED WORLD'S GREATEST

HER MAN-POWER DESTROYED

Even Her Spirit Menaced by Bolshevism — Organized Aid of Civilization Called Upon.

An account of present-day Serbia, her wants and her sufferings, was presented yesterday by Col. Homer Folks, former Charities Commissioner, who has just returned from traveling the length and breadth of the Balkan States, making a thorough investigation of conditions for the American Red Cross. No other country is in greater need than Serbia, he found, for her man power is depleted so that her industries could not operate even if material and equipment should be supplied and she is in want of practically everything necessary to preserve and maintain human and animal life.

"If I were to try to enumerate the things that Serbia needs and to give an adequate description of her economic conditions, I would have to begin at the top and follow down the list of all nouns of sustenance and adjectives of suffering," said Colonel Folks. "There is nothing outside the actual soil of her country, and that must be refertilized, which Serbia does not lack. She is a nation paralysed except as to spirit. And that will go, too, before long, if her needs are not met, for the forces of Bolshevism are near to her border, waiting for the moment to sweep down upon her."

Here are some of the reasons why the country's plight is desperate, as emphasized by Colonel Folks. They are conditions that existed when he left that unhappy country: "In Serbia not a bank was doing business; no schools were open for the children; there were practically no doctors or hospitals. In Serbia the stores have practically nothing to sell except food supplies locally produced; no factories were in operation, and practically no fuel was to be had. In Serbia no labor was available, and in that country there were no means of transportation, no horses, no mules, no automobiles, no trucks and but few oxen.

"Food must be rushed to her at once," the Colonel continued, "and I understand that this is now being done, but it will be hard to fill her hurry orders until her transportation is put into some sort of shape. From Skoplje on the south to Belgrade on the ... there is not a decent roadbed in Serbia. Her railways must be rebuilt. When ... left, that half from Skoplje to Nish ... been put in fair repair, and the remainder will soon be accomplished. In conjunction with this must be sent rolling stock, automobiles, gasoline, horses, mules and oxen. Immediately she must have garden tools, seeds and agricultural implements. She must have cattle, hogs and poultry. When these things have been attended to she will be able to feed herself."

He found that starvation was not the most destructive result of lack of food, but malnutrition brought epidemics, tuberculosis, and prulent anaemia. ... today, he said, human conservation is the greatest problem confronting her.

"The first great waste of life," he said, "came through the loss of man power on the battlefields. Altogether some 350,000 men were mobilized in the army. When she re-entered the war in 1918, even with all the men returned from America and other places, and with her entire manhood between the ages of 16 and 50 called to the colors, her fighting men numbered fewer than 100,000. Added to this, her death rate from tuberculosis alone during the Austrian occupation jumped to the astonishing figures of 1,453 in every 100,000. Infant mortality has increased accordingly. There are no accurate figures of the ravages of typhus and influenza.

"Before the war the birth rate of Serbia was greater than the death rate, which meant that, in spite of the inroads of epidemics, her population was increasing at the rate of 85,000 a year. Now it is accordingly decreasing. Bereft of her man power and with her women and children organically wasted, the question of population to till the soil and build up the country is not only perplexing, but baffling."

Fixing the remedy for this depletion Colonel Folks recommended these necessities for public consideration: Doctors, nurses, health officers, medicines, hospitals, clinics, dispensaries, public health agencies, district nurses, automobiles for doctors, and the facilities for combating epidemics and disease.

"In other words," he said, "Serbia needs money, trained people, training schools, and educational campaigns in which she will be taught that disease is not a necessity and that it can be controlled.

"Next winter she must have clothes, shoes, and more especially material for clothing, thread, buttons, and cotton cloth. Given these things little by little her wheels will begin to move and she will again become an organized community. Meanwhile she must have the help of the whole world, which she has saved at the price of her own life from the menace of German autocracy."

Guatemala Imprisons Archbishop.

SAN SALVADOR, June 28.—The Archbishop of San Salvador and the Bishops of Santa Ana and San Miguel have been informed that Archbishop José Pinol y Batres of Guatemala was imprisoned there after he had preached a sermon which the Guatemalan authorities considered objectionable. They are endeavoring to have him released.

French Fund for Celebration.

PARIS, June 28.—The Chamber of Deputies today appropriated 4,000,000 francs to defray the expenses of the victory celebration here on July 14. Socialist Deputies tried without avail to hitch to the appropriation a provision for the immediate demobilization after the parade of all troops taking part in it.

BEST MEN WANTED IN ARMY, SAYS BAKER

Secretary of War Declares All Recruits Will Be Improved in Every Way.

MORE MEN TO GO OVERSEAS

Recruits for Service in France and on Rhine Will Be Accepted Until Next Saturday.

The Army Recruiting Service here yesterday received a telegram from Secretary of War Baker declaring that the War Department was seeking for the new regular army only the highest type of men and promising that every effort would be exerted to turn back every soldier to civil life with a better education and a better training in some vocation. This is Secretary Baker's telegram:

The officers and men of the Recruiting Service are engaged on a task of great and immediate importance. Pressing need arises from the country's duty to return to their home and their civil pursuits as promptly as possible the men who have sacrificed every private consideration to the call to service under arms in a time of danger to free institutions and their defenders.

It is not the old peace-time army nor the old type of military service to which we now are seeking to enlist men. The army needs the highest type of men which can be secured and has set out to make service in its ranks beneficial to mental and moral, as well as to physical development, in a degree worthy to attract ambitious and capable men.

In so far as the army succeeds in this aim—as it is determined in all faith to succeed—young men who enter it will encounter opportunity for double service to country and to self. While they patriotically respond to their country's immediate need of men under arms, they prepare themselves to return to civil life capable of delivering a higher quality of citizenship and of exercising greater productive or directive ability.

"The telegram of the Secretary of War is an additional guarantee that promises made by the Recruiting Service to men who enlist in the army will be carried out," said Major C. B. Howard. "The promise is that any recruit may choose his branch of the service and stipulate his field of service. When the number of recruits fills the needs in the different branches and fields an announcement will be made, and no more men will be accepted until the Recruiting Service is notified that there are more vacancies. We are not trying to inveigle men into the army by false promises."

Notice also was received by the Recruiting Service that, although an announcement had been made in Washington on Wednesday that no more soldiers would be sent overseas, recruits for service in France and on the Rhine would be accepted up to midnight on Saturday, July 5. It was requested that "emphasis be laid on the fact that men who desire overseas service may enlist for that specific purpose any time before July 5."

Recruiting officers said that there was still room for hundreds of men in the overseas contingent, and that the signing of peace would increase the need rather than diminish it. Hundreds of the men in the regular divisions remained in the army, in accordance with universal custom during war, even after their regular term of enlistments had expired. Most of the men whose regular enlistments ended after April, 1917, are still in the army and, upon the signing of peace, are entitled to their discharges. Hundreds of others in the regular army divisions enlisted only for the duration of war, and will be released from service within four months after the proclamation of peace. All of these men will receive their discharges in the next few months and their places must be taken by recruits. It is also the desire to build every regular army unit to as near full strength as possible.

All recruiting stations in the metropolitan district reported renewed interest among applicants yesterday in the promise of service in the regular army units overseas. One of the applicants at the station at 461 Eighth Avenue was Paul Ulrich of 2,050 Bronx Street, the Bronx, who had just finished his education in the public schools. He said he was 18 years old, and was accepted for service after he had brought a letter showing that he had the consent of his parents in joining the army. Ulrich said he went to work as a machinist's helper after leaving school, and then decided that he could learn more in the army and save more money. He will be sent to France, in accordance with his preference. Another recruit with a story was Robert Freme of 336 Fulton Street, Brooklyn.

"I don't know whether to call myself a seagoing infantryman or a soldier submarine chaser," said Freme. "I am an Englishman by birth and by everything else until I took out my first citizenship papers here in America this morning. When the war started in 1914 I enlisted in the British Navy as a seaman. I was in the navy until just before the battle of Mons, when the British shortage of infantry caused them to commandeer all the spare sailors to oppose the Germans, and as I happened to be one of the spare sailors I was called upon to fight as an infantryman.

"After the battle of Mons they rushed over a lot more infantry and allowed us seagoing doughboys to return to our ships. I'd scarcely shaken my land legs and become familiar with navy commands when the battle of Jutland was fought and, as a member of the crew of the submarine chaser Meaned, I took part in that battle. Later, when the big drives were on, they needed men familiar with handling the big navy guns to support the British troops, and I got a little taste of land artillery.

"I want to see Western America, and I guess the cavalry will best insure my doing so. Of course I intend taking advantage of the educational program I have seen advertised by the army, and while I can make good money as a fireman on one of the big steamship lines, I think that the money, clothing, food, quarters, and medical allowances offered by the American Army will really mean more spending money to me."

BUILD NEW SYNAGOGUE.

Cornerstone of $150,000 Temple Is Laid in Bensonhurst.

The cornerstone of a $150,000 synagogue, at Benson Avenue and Bay Twenty-seventh Street, Bensonhurst, was laid last week, with appropriate orthodox ceremonies, under the auspices of the Congregation Sons of Israel. The congregation has worshipped for the last nineteen years in an old structure on Bay Twenty-second Street and Benson Avenue, but the constantly growing membership has made this place too small.

Most of the residents of Bensonhurst and Bath Beach turned out to witness the ceremonies, at which Judge Otto Rosalsky of the Court of General Sessions in Manhattan was the principal speaker. The Judge in his address predicted that the time was coming when Jewish houses of worship would include all of the religious and social activities essential to the rounding out of one's character. Synagogues of the future, he said, would contain gymnasiums, auditoriums, and swimming pools.

Sheriff Daniel J. Griffen spoke of the millennium in religion, asserting that the world war had brought humanity and the brotherhood of man to the place of leveling petty and artificial religious barriers which had existed. He concluded that today Jew and Gentile were working hand in hand in the common cause of bettering mankind.

Following the addresses twelve silver trowels, symbolical of the twelve tribes of Israel, were auctioned off. The first one was purchased by Leo D. Greenfield, a commission merchant of Manhattan and one of the members of the congregation who is mainly responsible for the movement for a new edifice. Mr. Greenfield paid $3,000 for this trowel, which he turned over to his father, Max Greenfield, who is Vice President of the congregation. The other trowels brought $1,000 apiece.

ROCKEFELLER UNITS MAY LEAVE FRANCE

Tuberculosis Commission of the Foundation Preparing to Withdraw, Says Annual Report.

The centralization of French agencies for an attack upon tuberculosis was the object in the work of the Rockefeller Foundation in France during the war, according to the review of the activities of the Foundation during 1918, made public yesterday. The work is now gradually being turned over to the French for continuation.

Dr. George E. Vincent, President of the Foundation, asks where there was any justification "for sending a commission overseas, save in the fact that France, sorely pressed by war, could spare neither personnel nor resources for a fight against the white plague?" He points out that in France there was almost every kind of agency known as effective in combating consumption, but that the various institutions and activities were isolated and almost unrelated.

Telling of the mode of attack, Dr. Vincent quotes an article on "The Medicinal Tank," written by a Frenchman. The article says:

"This tank rolls over the roads of France, bearing signboards. * * * Behold this tank entering a city—or a village. It does not come unannounced * * * a delegate arrives. He pays visits to all the newspapers and to the municipal, military, prefectoral, and religious authorities * * * the Mayor offers a free hall to the impresario—I mean the delegate. After the hall has been obtained the delegate covers the city with posters. And such posters! Barnum & Baily wolud not be ashamed of them. * * * The legends and designs make people laugh. They gather in a circle, they are amused and—instructed.

"Meantime a train at the station discharges a gentleman lecturer and a lady lecturer. These are accompanied by another lady, the 'demonstrator,' whose task it is to comment on the posters in the exposition room. Finally the automobile truck appears. The Directors of the 'International Department of Hygiene' of the Rockefeller Foundation are aware that even the best article does not sell unless you 'hit the nail on the head.' Possessors of that excellent, though neglected, commodity known as truth, they find that in spreading it public education is necessary, and that public education, after all, consists in nothing more than applying the art of advertising to the facts of science."

The report adds that during 1918 three traveling exhibits and groups of lecturers visited ten departments and, in 141 towns of 3,000 or more, gave 875 lectures, with demonstrations and exhibits. In the same period 2,115,708 pieces of printed matter, posters, pamphlets, post-cards, games, were distributed in France. A series of twenty-four articles on tuberculosis appeared in thirty-three important provincial newspapers. In conclusion the report says:

"A campaign of extension has reached twenty-seven departments. Representatives of the Commission and of the American Red Cross have visited leading towns and cities in a systematic effort to organize local committees and to induce these groups to establish dispensaries as the first step toward a complete plan for control of tuberculosis. In the twenty-seven departments, at the time of the first visit, twenty-one dispensaries were already in existence. By the end of the year fifty-seven new dispensaries had been opened; twenty other dispensaries were in process of installation, and plans for forty-nine more had been definitely made. Besides these dispensaries, fifteen laboratories were arranged for; thirty-eight new nurses installed, and forty-two new and active committees organized.

"It is important to remember that almost all of the expense, not only for the creation but for the maintenance of these activities, is borne by the French themselves. Plans are on foot for the establishment by the French of a complete system of dispensaries for the Région du Nord, which comprises the five departments recently reoccupied by the Allies and restored to France. Urgent requests are coming from many parts of the country for co-operation in organizing tuberculosis work.

"Allusion has been made to progress in the training of French nurses. It is equally gratifying to report that physicians are showing a keen and intelligent interest in the plans of the commission. Arrangements have been made to bring to the United States a group of these men and to afford them an opportunity to observe American institutions and methods. It is expected that in this way leadership will be provided for the assumption of rapidly increasing responsibility for the campaign in France.

"Local societies and committees which have co-operated so cordially with the commission are ready apparently to do their part, while Government officials have expressed the hope that a new ministry of health may be created which will take over the central supervision of the machinery that is being set up. Within a reasonable time, therefore, the Foundation expects to withdraw from France, confident that the work will go on until a nation-wide system for combating tuberculosis has become a permanent part of the policy of France."

Mayflower Society Adds Members to Tercentenary Committee.

In preparation for its share at the tercentenary celebration of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth, Mass., which will be held there in December, 1920, the Society of Mayflower Descendants in the State of New York has just increased its Tercentenary Committee to fifty members. Supreme Court Justice Russell Benedict is Chairman of the committee and William H. Powers is Secretary.

Among the members of the enlarged committee are General De Witt Hamilton, Thomas C. T. Crain, Mrs. Charles H. Sherrill, Mrs. James Creelman, Samuel D. Brewster, Mrs. Edwards Spencer, Seth Sprague Terry, Howland Davis, Charles Eliot Warren, Mrs. Charles E. Hughes, Morgan G. Bulkeley, Edwin D. Morgan, Winthrop Burr, Frederick C. Seabury, John F. Yawger, Richard H. Greene, William H. Childs, John P. Tilden, Dr. William S. Thomas, and Frederick H. Hatch.

The committee has sanctioned the project to erect a suitable monument in New York City to commemorate the arrival in this country of the Mayflower in 1620. It will be of bronze and stone, and, provided that satisfactory subscriptions are received from the members of the New York State society, it is hoped to have the memorial completed and ready for dedication on the tercentenary date.

The General Society of Mayflower Descendants is preparing to raise $25,000 to purchase two corner lots at the end of Middle Street, Plymouth, Mass., to be added to the ancient burial ground on Cole's Hill. The contemplated purchase would give the society the ownership of the original graveyard, only a portion of which is now preserved. The property will provide sufficient room for an oval 100 by 40 feet, which will be inclosed by a stone coping and marked in the centre by a monument or boulder containing the names of the original settlers who died at Plymouth during the first Winter.

Suspend Sing Sing Keepers.

OSSINING, June 28.—It was announced here today that fifteen days' suspension from duty was the sentence imposed upon there keepers in Sing Sing who failed to discover the artistic dummy left by John McAllister in his cell when he escaped recently. They thought the wax dummy was the prisoner himself. The suspended keepers pleaded guilty before Warden Edward V. Brophy to charges of neglect of duty. Leniency was shown because the effigy resembled the prisoner so closely.

SAYS ITALY ADMITS AID OF JUGOSLAVS

PROOF THEY HATED AUSTRIA

Says They Were Willing to Fight Under Any Nation to Gain Their Freedom.

R. F. Hlacha of the Jugoslav Information Bureau yesterday made reply to a statement made by the Italian Information Bureau concerning the part taken by Jugoslav prisoners in the war on the western front in France. He said that the statement of the Italian War Ministry, whose purpose it was to deny there was co-operation between the Jugoslavs and the Italians on the western front, made the "interesting acknowledgment that the Italian Army Intelligence Service succeeded in enlisting 900 Jugoslav prisoners, so that they could communicate for propaganda purposes with their fellow-countrymen in the enemy lines."

"The Italian Ministry of War acknowledges that one incentive which moved the Jugoslav volunteers to enlist in a very dangerous service was their genuine hatred of the Austro-Hungarian Empire," continued Mr. Hlacha. "In view of the endeavors of Italian propaganda to depict the Jugoslavs as upholders of the late Austrian monarchy, this acknowledgement is precious.

"But the statement says that the Jugoslav delegates in Italy instructed these volunteers to refuse to serve Italy until they were recognized as members of an allied nation. The particulars of this case are not known to this bureau, but if they are as stated, nobody could blame this diplomatically reasonable move of the Jugoslav leaders, in view of Sonnino's anti-Jugoslav policy, averse to the Pact of Rome.

"With limping logic, the Italian statement says that 'although the conception of a Jugoslav nation was entirely unknown to the prisoners, they were glad to obey the orders of the Jugoslav delegates because it kept them from the risks of their mission, as elements of the Italian Intelligence Office.' Before matters were settled, according to the statement, the armistice came.

"So we have here, the case of some Jugoslavs enlisting as Jugoslavs but not knowing they were Jugoslavs, again obeying Jugoslav leaders in order not to perform a service for which they had volunteered. One gets dizzy.

Italy's Lost Opportunity.

"The cultural and political union of the Southern Slavs, formerly a dream of centuries and now an accomplished fact, may be agreeable or not to the Italians, but by persisting in closing their eyes to a fact they will only fall again and again into such inconsistencies.

"In Italy, there were no Jugoslav legions fighting as on the Dobrudja, on the Saloniki front, and in Siberia—we do not mention here the Jugoslavs from Serbia and Montenegro, but only those from former Austria-Hungary. The London treaty, promising to Italy territory containing at least 700,000 Slavs—by an irony of fate just those among whom national feeling is most keenly developed—certainly could not encourage them. Then came the Pact of Rome, which, by the way, will remain in history as marking one of the greatest opportunities missed by Italy, through Sonnino's endeavor, for the sake of a narrow-hearted nationalism. Italy seemed to be willing to co-ordinate its policy with principles of international justice. New hope arose in the hearts of the Jugoslav prisoners in Italy, and they were willing to fight even on the Italian front.

"To quote but a single example, the following appeal was addressed on July 1, 1918, to the Italian Government by 153 Jugoslav officers interned at Nocera:

"We, the undersigned officers and cadets of Jugoslav nationality, (Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes of Austria-Hungary,) are ready and eager to fight against Austria-Hungary and her allies for the liberation of our Jugoslav nation from their rule. The Jugoslav Committee, presided over by Dr. Trumbich, enjoys our entire confidence, and we formally authorize it to represent us and place ourselves at its disposal for whatever work may be useful, and in particular for the work of preparing, both morally and politically, the prisoners of Jugoslav nationality, subject to the permission of the Italian authorities.

"We beg the Italian Government to bear in mind that, while are willing to serve as volunteers on the Italian front against the common enemy, we desire to do so in such a way that our relations with the Serbian Army shall express the idea of national unity with Serbia, and of common State independence, which is the sole true aim to which we would dedicate ourselves.

Accusation Against Sonnino.

"Despite repeated and urgent appeals from the prisoners themselves, from the Jugoslav Committee, from the Serbian headquarters, from many serious quarters in the west, from the Jugoslav colonies of North and South America, and from several of the leading organs of Italian public opinion, Baron Sonnino obstinately refused to release these men. His attitude in this affair amounts to a very grave public scandal, since, in the same breath, he professed, through his press, disbelief in the desire of the Croats and Slovenes to liberate themselves from Hapsburg rule, and deliberately prevented large numbers of them from putting their sentiments to the most practical of all proofs."

Regarding the statement made by the Italian Information Bureau that the reason Italy refuses a plebiscite in the contested territory is similar to the case of France and Alsace-Lorraine, "a restitution of a wrong done France by severing from her a province which was French in spirit," Mr. Hlacha said:

"There is no restitution in the case of the Adriatic. Roman and Venetian times won't do. Besides, the numerical proportion between Italians and Slavs in the contested territories have been altered in the last century to the detriment of the Slavs and not of the Italians. The plebiscite is the only just solution of the Adriatic question, and the Italians by opposing it show they are on the wrong side."

WANT McMILLIN TO STAY.

President Is Urged to Appoint Him as Ambassador to Peru.

LIMA, Peru, June 27.—The American Society of Peru has initiated a movement to have Benton McMillin, the American Minister, retained here as Ambassador. Minister McMillin recently was nominated by President Wilson to be Minister to Guatemala. The society at a meeting yesterday unanimously authorized its Board of Managers to send President Wilson this cablegram:

"American Society of Peru sincerely regrets possible loss of Benton McMillin as American Minister and wishes to inform President of United States that McMillin's appointment as Ambassador here would be most gratifying to the members of this society."

A number of Peruvian newspapers have indorsed the suggestion.

MYSTERY IN DELAY OF R. J. MINOR TRIAL

American Embassy Expected to Act in Case of New York Newspaper Man.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, June 28.—Considerable mystery surrounds the delay in bringing to trial Robert J. Minor, a New York newspaperman, who has been in jail here since June 10. The charges against Minor have not yet been served against him. His friends in Paris are showing great interest in the case.

There is every probability that the American Embassy will take a hand.

Minor was arrested in Paris and brought here by the French authorities. A commission, headed by Major Gen. Summerall, was named ten days ago to try Minor, but no formal action has yet been taken.

As has been cabled, there was found in the possession of Minor at his hotel in Paris a trunk full of pamphlets believed to have been printed for circulation among American troops in Germany which were considered Bolshevist propaganda.

None of these was circulated among the American troops, and neither did Minor or his friends enter American-occupied territory voluntarily. He and his propaganda were brought here forcibly. His friends also argue that the alleged offense must have been committed outside of the American military zone, and therefore is out of the jurisdiction of the American Army of Occupation.

There is every indication that able counsel will be brought here to defend Minor, should he eventually come to trial.

The American military authorities are still investigating the case to see of any one besides Minor is involved.

WANTS TO DROP BRONX LINE

City Interborough Says Randall Avenue Route Is Little Used.

The New York City Interborough Railway Company, which is operated as part of the Third Avenue Railway system, has asked the Public Service Commission for permission to abandon part of unused or little used lines in the Bronx. These lines are the Randall Avenue route extending from Southern Boulevard to the Bronx River and a stretch of track on 180th Street between Southern Boulevard and Third Avenue.

It is alleged by the company in its application that only a few passengers use the Randall Avenue line daily and that it can be abandoned without inconvenience to the public. The stretch of track referred to is paralleled by the Fordham Road line of the Third Avenue system. A hearing on the application was set for July 24 at 2:30 o'clock.

The application of the Third Avenue Railway Company for authority to install a new line from 145th Street and Lenox Avenue through Amsterdam Avenue and Broadway to Van Cortlandt Park, has been granted by Deputy Public Service Commissioner Edward J. Glennon.

The commission explained that the new line would extend appreciably the ride to be had for a 5-cent fare and that it would be of great convenience to thousands of persons desiring to reach Van Cortlandt Park or who desire to connect with the Yonkers trolley cars at 242d Street.

TELL OF GRIM WANT THAT FACES ITALY

Relief Committee Says That Destitution There Has Been Underestimated.

PLEA FOR $100,000 FUND

The New York Committee of the Italian War Relief Fund of America has received information from Americans recently returned from Italy, and from other sources as well, concerning conditions in Italy due to the war. All these reports indicate, the committee states, that the situation is one deserving of the most serious consideration, and that the needs of Italy have been greatly underestimated.

"The underestimating of conditions," says a statement issued yesterday by the committee, "is due, in part, to the sensitiveness of the people and to the lack of publicity in this country concerning the situation. From many letters received two are selected as typical, the first being from Dr. W. John Murray to Robert Underwood Johnson, the Chairman of the committee.

On the eve of my return to Italy I can only take a few moments from my busy last hours in America to tell you what my personal impressions are concerning the needs of Italy and her people. In view of the fact that men like Mr. Davison and Mr. Vanderlip have pointed out so clearly the financial needs of the Government of Italy, if she is to rise out of the limitations which are always imposed by war, it is unnecessary for me to touch upon that particular point. As badly as Italy is in need of provisions, raw materials and machinery, she cannot purchase these without cash and hence the need for some form of beneficence in the shape of a loan on easy terms.

In the beginning of the war the healthy cows were taken by the Government to provide its army with food, and such cows as remained were used to plow the fields and gather the harvests. As these were worked very hard and fed very little and rested less, the milk they gave was of miserable quality. In course of time these cows becoming debilitated became easy victims to hoof-and-mouth diseases, which carried them off wholesale, leaving Italy almost entirely deprived of milk for her wounded soldiers and young people. Today the need is greater than ever for this particular form of food.

During the war I have been in France and England and, despite shortage of food in both these countries, the situation is not at all comparable with conditions in Italy. There are over five hundred thousand mutilati and a countless host of children for whom nourishing food must be provided. Therefore, I urge you and those who are associated with you, nothwithstanding all you have accomplished in the past, to urge more strenuously now and for some time to come, the frequent shipments of such things as are necessary to the continuance of life among our valiant allies, the Italians.

Henry M. Rae, an American living in Florence, writes as follows to H. Nelson Gay, the representative of the committee in Rome, concerning an orphan asylum at Sezze, to which, on the further indorsement of Colonel Bartlett and Major White of the American Red Cross, the committee has since sent 5,000 lire. Mr. Rae writes:

The following is the result of my inspection at Sezze: There are two orphan asylums, one for boys and one for girls, with fifty children in each, orphans on account of the war and the influenza. I found them very well-conducted institutions. The boys' asylum occupies an old monastery with its large grounds. Here they have created a "model farm" where the boys receive instruction in scientific farming covering the cultivation of grain, vegetables, grapes, olives, &c., as well as the raising of fowl and farm animals. They have object lessons in the use of fertilizers and in farming without them. It is a very meritorious institution, under able direction. The produce of the farm goes to maintain the inmates of both asylums. The girls' asylum is well located and conducted. The girls are taught sewing and other things useful. It is a disadvantage that the girls have no playground, only a court.

Both these asylums have received aid from the city of Sezze and from two Italian associations. The American Red Cross has given them some beds, a shower bath for the boys, and one meal per day until the end of June, 1919. The needs are many. At the boys' asylum, for hygienic reasons, the tile pavements are necessary. The floors are in bad condition. The old, crumbling bricks cannot be kept clean and sanitary. Water closets are urgently necessary. There is a building adjoining and connected with the old convent which, if remodeled, could accommodate many more boys, but as this would require an expenditure of about 40,000 lire, they are almost afraid to ask for it.

The advantage of helping this institution is that while it is war relief it remains as a permanent benefit, and will continue to turn out good, useful, and intelligent farmers.

I heartily recommend the expenditures asked for these purposes.

In view of these facts Robert Underwood Johnson, President of the American committee, makes an appeal to the public for funds to support the committee's activities in Italy. The committee needs $100,000 at once to supplement the $100,000 it has received in the last year.

The office of the Italian War Relief Fund is at 347 Madison Avenue. The Treasurer of the fund is S. Reading Bertron, and among the members of the committee are Charles E. Hughes, George W. Wickersham, Mrs. H. B. Duryea, William Church Osborn, Eliot Norton, Mrs. Mary Hatch Willard, Mrs. Charles H. Ditson, and Thomas Hastings.

British War Relief.

At a meeting of the British War Relief Association, held a few days ago, it was decided to discontinue the activities of the association until next Fall. The Board of Directors, at the meeting, voted $1,000 to the Poor Clergy Relief Corporation of England, and subscribed $5,000 to the fund which is to be used in erecting a memorial hospital to Miss Edith Cavell and Mme. De Page in Brussels.

Red Cross Summer Work.

Through its Home Service Department the Atlantic Division of the Red Cross has launched an extensive Summer activity in providing outings for discharged and disabled men and for the families of soldiers and sailors.

In co-operation with Mrs. Gouverneur Ogden, the Red Cross will maintain forty men all Summer at the Long Branch Army and Navy Club. Then there will be twenty-five men at the Richfield, Conn., Convalescent Home, which cares chiefly for gas patients, and Mountain View Farm, at Lee, Mass., under the supervision of Dr. Austin Riggs, will also receive a quota of war-scarred men for whom the Red Cross has made itself responsible.

At Surprise Lake the Young Men's Hebrew Association Camp, the Red Cross is placing many of its charges. These are usually discharged soldiers who need outdoor exercise and sports to put them in normal condition, and who are sufficiently advanced on the road to recovery not to be regarded as invalids. The camp has all the recreation and sports usually found at a well-equipped boys' camp. Beside the soldiers' tent, the Red Cross also maintains a tent for younger boys—sons or brothers of soldiers who have come under the care of the Home Service Department.

Miss Myra Hopson, a graduate of Smith College and a graduate nurse, has turned her farm at Kent, Conn., into a convalescent home for soldiers, under Red Cross auspices, and is herself in charge. The home is not open yet, but will receive its first patients about the middle of July.

An equal activity in behalf of the women and children of soldiers' families, who have come under the care of Home Service during the past Winter, is in operation and it is planned to send at least 880 children and 150 mothers to fresh-air farms through the Red Cross. In this the organization is co-operating with The Tribune, Life, The Christian Herald, the Salvation Army, and the Blodgett Memorial fresh-air funds.

At Long Branch, N. J., the Red Cross is operating a Summer home for mothers and children, elderly women and young working girls whose family obligations make it impossible for them to afford a "pay" vacation. This home is financed by a $8,000 fund raised at a concert given for the purpose by Heifetz, the violinist.

The novelty about the home is its lack of "institutional" atmosphere. Family groups are assured an independence and privacy by having their own bedroom, instead of being divided among various dormitories. This is particularly grateful to the mothers of small children who express themselves as delighted with an arrangement that keeps their children close under the watchful maternal eye all during the outing.

Milk for French Sufferers.

The Princess de Poix, who is in charge of the work of the Free Milk for France Fund in France, has just acknowledged by cable the receipt of 567 cases, or 17,000 pounds, of dried milk, recently shipped from New York. During the past few months this organization has supplied invalids and children with dried milk in 1,900 towns and villages in France.

The work of this fund, whose headquarters are at 1 West Fifty-sixth Street, is carried on in France free of all expense. Mrs. Warren McConihe, President of the Committee, is in France at the present time in the interest of the fund.

DETAILS OF NAVY REORGANIZATION

Division Into Two Battleship Fleets Becomes Effective Tomorrow.

NEARLY EQUAL IN TONNAGE

Great Atlantic and Pacific Fleets Will Meet Twice Yearly in War Games.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—The change in the American naval policy whereby the ships are reorganized into two powerful major battleship fleets becomes effective tomorrow. In the past it has been the policy to keep all the battleships in active commission in one great fleet known as the Atlantic Fleet. Hereafter there will be two, the Atlantic Fleet and the Pacific Fleet. The Atlantic Fleet will have its rendezvous in the Atlantic and the new Pacific battleship fleet will cruise and manoeuvre in the Pacific.

Besides these two main fleets there will be certain naval detachments in European waters and an Asiatic fleet, based on the Philippines.

Admiral Henry Baird Wilson, until recently ranking American naval officer at Brest, will hoist his pennant as Commander of the new Atlantic fleet tomorrow. On the same day the new Pacific Fleet will be formed at Hampton Roads, and Admiral Hugh Rodman, who was in command of the American battleship squadron that saw service with the British fleet in the North Sea, will assume command.

Admiral Rodman expects to sail from Hampton Roads with the new Pacific Fleet for the Pacific on July 17, via the Panama Canal. Secretary Daniels hopes to be able to make the trip to the Pacific on the dreadnought New Mexico, which has been chosen as Admiral Rodman's flagship.

The plan has been to make the two major fleets as nearly equal as possible, and at least twice annually it is planned to bring them together for competitive war games. The battleships in the new Atlantic Fleet will have an aggregate displacement of 314,350 tons. Those in the Pacific Fleet will have an aggregate displacement of 324,140 tons. There will also be cruisers, destroyers, submarines, and other units attached to each.

ARMY TELEGRAPHERS BACK.

Warm Welcome Given to Returning 403d and 404th Battalions.

The 403d and 404th Telegraph Battalions, composed almost exclusively of New Yorkers, returned yesterday after thirteen months' service in the army abroad. Tomorrow night the Telephone Society of New York will entertain the army keymen at a dinner at the Hotel Commodore, and later will give a reception at the Seventh Regiment Armory. About 15,000 relatives, friends and business associates of the men are expected at the reception.

"These battalions," according to a statement yesterday by the New York Telephone Company, "form a part of the great contribution that the telephone companies of the United States made to the Government for the war. The 402d is recruited from up-State divisions of the New York Telephone Company and the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company. The 404th is from the New York Telephone Company exclusively.

"Their mission in France was to cement together the widely scattered units of our overseas army by building lines of communication. The miles of wire from the base ports of Bordeaux and Marsailles to the bridge heads of Coblenz and Treves are the monuments of their accomplishments. Most battalions comprise some of the men who made the communication system of the United States Army a thing of envy and wonder to the allied armies.

"The 403d Telegraph Battalion was called into the service in the Fall of 1917, and went to Camp Meade for training. It remained in camp until the Spring of 1918, when it went overseas. Upon its arrival in France, it was sent to the vicinity of Paris and began work on the construction of the main line from General Headquarters, at Chaumont, to Paris. This job completed, the battalion moved into the advance zone of the American sector and assisted in the construction of lines from General Headquarters forward to combatant troops. Over lines that they built messages were flashed which directed the troop movements in the great offensives of St. Mihel and Meuse-Argonne.

"After the signing of the armistice the 403d assisted in carrying forward the telephone and telegraph lines to the advanced positions of our Army of Occupation. This work completed, they were set to work maintaining these lines in good condition.

"The 404th Battalion was called into Federal service in October, 1917, and sent to Camp Dodge, where it remained until the following Spring. In France it was split up into small detachments and assigned to various headquarters for the construction and maintenance of telephone lines. Later they were sent up to Treves, Germany, which is Advanced General Headquarters of the American Army, and took over the telephone and telegraph system of the Army of Occupation. They enlarged and perfected this system until at present our army in Germany has a telephone system which would do credit to an American city."

END ARCHANGEL CAMPAIGN.

ARCHANGEL, June 27, (Associated Press.)—The last of the American forces here, with the exception of Brig. Gen. Wilds P. Richardson, the American commander, and a small detachment of headquarters troops, embarked today for Brest. The forces which sailed were a battalion of the 310th Engineers. Before sailing, every officer of the battalion and twenty enlisted men were decorated by the Russian command for gallantry and efficiency.

General Richardson and the headquarters detachment will remain here several weeks. The field railway troops on the Murmanak front will sail soon. In view of the valuable services of these latter troops, the North Russian Government is pleading strongly for their retention throughout the Summer.

The departure of the 310th Engineers marks the close of American participation in the Archangel campaign. With the exception of a strong British reserve this campaign is being conducted now only by the Russians.

The Russians and British on the Dvina front are gaining ground, and have taken a number of prisoners in the last two weeks' fighting.

In reporting the arrival of the steamer Porto at Brest on June 24, a Brest dispatch named General Richardson as among those on board. The foregoing dispatch from Archangel shows that this report was erroneous.

WATER SMOTHERS MANY AN OIL HOPE

Hundred-Million-Barrel Well Suddenly Disappoints Curb Market Speculators.

A SCIENTIFIC EXPLANATION

Salt in Petroleum Sands Concentrated by Evaporation Thousands of Feet Underground.

To the average Curb Market investor "oil" means nothing but a hope that a company organized to produce petroleum or manipulate petroleum already produced will be able to pay dividends. Brokers who deal in oil stocks very often have ideas about how oil is discovered, how it is lured into tank cars and tank ships, and how prepared for market, almost as hazy as those of the average investor in stock hopes. Broad Street has a nebulous notion that a "dry hole" ought to be sprinkled, or that a "gusher" may have some of the characteristics of a superlative young woman because both are supposed to gush, but few bother about the scientific and industrial ends of the business, though they are the departments that make the profits or the losses on their investments.

That a well that has been making tremendous dividends for its owners should be salted in or drowned out means only a misfortune, a variation of divine wrath to the ticker hound to whom oil is often more of a mystery than the processes of gold or copper mining, or the making of steel or acetic acid.

At once in a while such an event as the going bad of the Potrero del Llano well in Mexico, which before it failed had put out 100,000,000 barrels of oil, stirs even Broad Street to wonder. The great flock of oil speculators buy and sell merely because others buy and sell and give and take tips, but at the bottom oil speculation has its foundation upon the fact that there has been an enormous recent increase in the use of gasoline and other derivatives of crude petroleum and the belief that nearly half the total amount of oil originally stored in the ground in the United States has been consumed. These facts have led those who are closely associated with the oil industry to regard as very valuable any new information which may aid in discovering new fields or in increasing the production from the old fields. A report based on investigations made in the Appalachian field by R. Van A. Mills and Roger C. Wells, contains many new facts concerning oil-field waters which may be of service in solving the problem of increasing the country's production of oil, and at the same time add to the fund of knowledge that oil speculators should have.

In general oil and gas occur not in large caverns or in underground lakes, but in minute open spaces between the grains of porous sandstones. The oil in nearly all fields is accompanied by variable quantities of water, generally very salty. Nearly every oil well yields some water with the oil, and many yield considerably more water than oil. The amount of water in the oil-water mixture generally increases as the well grows older, until finally the yield of oil may be too small to make the well pay and it is then said to be "drowned out." The drowning of many wells is a result of the natural movement of oil and water in the rocks—a movement consequent upon the removal of large quantities of oil and gas through wells—but drowning is often the result of leakage of water from a water-bearing stratum into the oil-bearing stratum through nonproducing wells which have been drilled through both strata and from which the casing has been removed.

A thorough knowledge of the chemical properties of oil-field waters would aid the oil operator in detecting the source of such damaging leakage, for the waters in different strata and at different depths are of different composition. In the bulletin just published by the Geological Survey, Messrs. Mills and Wells present analyses of many oil field waters and suggest how such analyses can be used to advantage in avoiding trouble with water in oil fields. Valuable information is also given regarding the chemical interactions which probably occur underground in some oil fields when waters containing different salts in solution become mixed and interact to form precipitates which plug and close the rock pores and decrease or stop the flow of oil.

The discovery of the source of the oil-field brines is essential to an understanding of their relations to the oil with which they are mixed, and to an interpretation of them as indicators of future success or failure in new fields which are being tested with the drill. The brines have usually been regarded as fossil sea water, which was imprisoned in the sands and clays as these were deposited on the sea bottom. After extended chemical studies, however, the authors conclude that though these brines may originally have been sea water they have been changed in various ways, principally in the nature and proportions of the salts they contain and in their concentration. These changes have probably been more effective than the original composition of the sea water in determining the present composition of the oil-field brines.

The changes in composition are believed to have resulted from the leaching of the sediments by the waters and from the chemical interaction of the brines with other waters of different composition. The concentration is believed to have resulted largely from the evaporation of the water in the brines deep underground, the vapor passing into large volumes of natural gas. Gas migrates much more easily than oil and escapes at the surface in large quantities. It is believed to have been forming in deep strata under oil fields and escaping for ages, bearing with it enormous volumes of water vapor. In some places the concentration of the water has thus gone on until salts were precipitated in the rocks in large quantities, perhaps closing or sealing up the oil in the rocks so that it cannot be obtained by drilling wells. Some wells fail almost immediately after they begin to flow, being "salted up" in this way. This "salting up" appears to be due to the rapid evaporation underground of moisture from the brine into gases that escape from the well and the consequent supersaturation of the brine and the precipitation of solid salts, which clog the rock pores and the drill hole or casing.

The oil field brines are unique in composition, for they contain practically no sulphates, the ratio of the sodium and magnesium to the chlorine in them is less than in sea water and the ratio of calcium to chlorine is greater. Moreover, oil field brines range in concentration from slightly less to several times greater than sea water. The brines are distinguishable from fresh drainage waters by their much lower content of carbonates. The value of establishing the character of oil field waters becomes apparent when it is recognized that the analysis of a brine obtained in wildcat or prospect drilling may indicate whether oil is present near a drill hole in the stratum from which the brine is obtained, even if the drill strikes no oil.

HUNGER HELPS DIABETICS.

Number of Deaths Reduced in Germany by Food Shortage.

During the course of the world war, as the blockade and unfavorable internal conditions were gradually cutting down the rations of the Central Empires, it was frequently noted in German newspapers that, at all events, the food shortage had some redeeming features, chief of which was its beneficial effects upon sufferers from diabetes.

In corroboration of this assertion, now comes Professor Rosenfeld of Breslau with an article in a recent number of the Zentralblatt für Innere Medizin, showing how the number of deaths from diabetes was reduced during the war. In Berlin such deaths in 1918 totaled 177 against 284 in 1917, 321 in 1916, 383 in 1915, 407 in 1914 and 408 in 1913; in Munich they were 77, 74, 82, 101, 104 and 105 for the same years, and in Breslau they were 81, 72, 83, 113, 115 and 100.

PLANES DIRECT FIRE ON SHAM FOE AT SEA

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 21.—The War Department tonight was advised that army observers in two airplanes, operating at a height of nearly a mile above Fort Hancock, N. Y., directed the fire of 12-inch guns on a target stationed at a distance of 24,000 yards at sea. The firing of the shots was observed for visibility by a third airplane flying at an altitude of 16,000 feet.

The experiment was wholly successful and the first one of its kind conducted in this country for the purpose of directing artillery for forts on shore against an imaginary enemy at sea. The targets were placed at a distance of approximately fifteen miles at sea.

The officers in charge of the two planes were Lieutenant Clyde V. Finter, pilot, and Lieutenant Robert Stell, radio officer, in one plane, and Lieutenant Bernard J. Peoples, pilot, with Robert H. Bert, radio officer, in the second plane. Both these planes were of the Curtis H. type.

A modern 12-inch army gun was used in the experiment, one of the weapons in batteries at Fort Hancock, which is part of the defenses of New York City. The firing began at 1:40 o'clock this afternoon and lasted for a period of one hour and fifty minutes. A total of thirteen shots was fired.

The first shot fired through two miles from the target. Other shots fired tracketed the target at 150 yards, or 450 feet, which means that if the target had been a modern dreadnought it would have been hit by these shots.

The success of the whole experiment is regarded as very important for the future coast defense of the United States and for the protection of the great port of New York against the battleship fleet of any enemy attacking that port from sea.

FAVOR MUTUAL INSURANCE.

Farmers Have 2,000 Companies That Carry Risks of $6,000,000,000.

Nearly 2,000 farmers' mutual fire insurance companies in the United States have a total of $6,000,000,000 of insurance now in force. These companies in general have shown a high degree of stability and have proved of much value to their members, specialists of the Department of Agriculture say in a report of the prevailing plans and practices among such companies obtained from replies to questionnaires sent out by the Bureau of Markets. These companies are organized in all States except Florida, Louisiana, New Mexico, Arizona, and Nevada, more than four-fifths of them being located in the Middle Atlantic and North Central States.

Of the 1,161 companies replying to questionnaires, 124 were incorporated by special acts of Congress, while 967 were incorporated under general statute, and 21 existed as voluntary associations without incorporation. The smallest membership of any company was 23, and the largest was 32,433, the average membership being 1,532. Nearly four-fifths of the 1,116 companies reporting on membership were organizations of fewer than 2,000 members. The prevailing plan is to allow each member one vote regardless of the amount of insurance or number of policies held. More than four-fifths of the companies follow this plan.

The average as well as the most common number of Directors for the companies reporting was nine, the favorite term for Directors being either one or three years. In a number of laws more recently enacted, it is specifically prescribed that the term of a Director shall be three years, and that one-third of the number shall be elected each year.

All the companies returning a questionnaire gave information concerning the hazards against which insurance was written. Thirty-three companies insured against fire only, 958 against fire and lightning, and 170 gave combined protection covering fire, lightning and windstorms. The giving of the last-named form of protection can be engaged in with safety only by the larger companies with their risks widely distributed. The more local mutuals in many States have co-operated with one another in the organization of State-wide companies to care for the windstorm insurance of their members.

Among the 808 companies which reported the maximum single risk accepted by them, the highest for any company was $15,000 and the lowest $750. A total of 349 companies reported their maximum single risks as large as $4,000, and only 58 companies provided for a maximum of less than $2,000. The average maximum risk for all companies reporting was $3,994.

The report points out that there is a wide variety in the plans and practices of farmers' mutual companies and that they could be greatly improved by standardization. While rigid uniformity may not be desirable, a reasonable approach to uniformity in the plans and practices, at least within a given State, would be a material advantage. The general public would be more easily convinced of the soundness and real value of these companies as a class. The approval and support of the Insurance Department of the State would be more easily secured than is sometimes the case under present conditions. Financial institutions which lend money to farmers would more readily accept the policies of these companies as collateral, and, lastly, the companies themselves would find it easier to co-operate with one another in matters of reinsurance or joint insurance, as well as in meeting other problems that arise.

ARMY TRAIN READY FOR TRIP TO COAST

Motor Transport Outfit Which Will Cross Continent Is Three Miles Long.

DEMONSTRATIONS ON WAY

Communities Prepare for Expedition Which Will Follow the Lincoln Highway.

An army motor transport train, three miles long, will leave Washington a week from tomorrow on a transcontinental journey, the route of which will be the Lincoln Highway and the final destination San Francisco. The trip is scheduled to be made in sixty days, and the War Department orders states that "it will serve as a test of the efficiency of the army's transport service," and that furthermore it will "demonstrate to the nation the inestimable value of a system of national highways."

"The plans for the adventure have been completed," says the official statement. "All equipment has been assembled and the personnel detail assigned. This transport train will be the heaviest in the history of any army. It will be even heavier than any single unit of the huge transport service used to keep the armies of the Allies supplied along the French front. No motor transport train of any nation has ever attempted a continuous journey of 3,000 miles in sixty days with full war equipment. The motor trucks will carry not only their own supplies to last the entire journey, but will carry supply and repair units, as well as full complements of men and officers. The marching orders call for an average of 75 miles a day. This schedule necessitates a speed of 15 miles an hour all the way from Washington to the coast, no matter how unfavorable the weather or geographical conditions.

"The War Department, through the Chief of the Motor Transport Corps, Brig. Gen. Drake, has officially notified the War Camp Community Service of the departure of the transport train, and requested it to care for the men all the way from Washington to San Francisco, sending the itinerary of the line of march. The War Camp Community Service has been authorized to make official announcement of the event for the War Department, and has already dispatched special letters with instructions to all of its organizers and field workers along the line of march. Plans for the men's care and recreation during their brief evenings in each community have already been perfected.

"The decision to send three miles of army motor trucks across the country was reached several days ago in Washington after consultation between General Drake, in command of the transport service; Colonel Owen Seaman, and Lieut. Col. J. M. Ritchie, working in close collaboration with the Lincoln Highway Association.

To Cross Continental Divide.

"The most picturesque features of the long journey will be the manner in which the long, snake-like train of motor vehicles will wind its heavy, lumbering way over the Rocky Mountains. It will cross by way of the Continental Divide. The engineering staff of the army has carefully figured out the journey, so that no mechanical or engineering obstacles stand in the way of its success.

"The start is to be made on the morning of July 1 from Lafayette Square, in front of the White House. The van of the train will immediately leave the capital, headed for Pittsburgh. The course then followed will take the soldiers' trucks through Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Utah, and Nevada. The transport trucks will finally drop down the western slope of the Sierra Nevada range to Sacramento, Cal., and then on to San Francisco.

"For many years the Lincoln Highway Association has endeavored to secure the backing of the Government in its project to build a thoroughly sound ocean-to-ocean highway. The proposed journey of the three miles of motor transports is the first official assistance that it has received in its project. In many States good roads have been campaign slogans, and many Governors and Mayors have been made or unmade, according to their ideas on this public question. The War Department, in its official statement to the War Camp Community Service, called attention to the political importance of good roads throughout the country.

"It is planned to establish a good roads day in the various States on the days the transport convoy is passing through them. The schools will be closed as on a holiday, and the train will be welcomed along the route by various civic organizations.

"Because of the importance of good roads the cross-continent journey of the motor transport convoy will not only interest the nation as a spectacle of military efficiency and preparedness, but will appeal to every business interest. Good roads mean good business. From a military standpoint the necessity for good ocean-to-ocean highways is incalculable.

To be Met by Governors.

"The Governors' staffs of each State will greet the motor train and escort it from the eastern to the western boundary of the State, where in turn it will be met by the officials of the adjoining State. When the convoy reaches California, arrangements have been made for Governor Hiram Johnson to preside over the elaborate welcoming ceremony. The military effect of the journey will be even greater than the civic lesson that it will teach. It will demonstrate the practicability of getting a huge army across the continent in sixty days.

"It is also proposed to have the President of the United States dedicate a tablet in Lafayette Square marking not only the starting point of the cross-continent army jaunt but also serving as the original point of all the national highways in the country. The tablet will consist of an engraved map of the United States. All the national highways, now and later authorized, will be filled in in gold."

The principal cities through which the motor transport train will pass are Gettysburg, Pittsburgh, Canton, Fort Wayne, South Bend, Chicago, Cedar Rapids, Cheyenne, Salt Lake City, Carson, Sacramento, Stockton, and Oakland.

SAYS RADIO WILL GUIDE AIR FLEETS

Wireless Expert Believes Vast Lanes of Travel Will Be Created Eventually.

WOULD DEFY BAD WEATHER

Weagant Suggests Directional Finding by Towers Similar to System Used by NC Planes.

Several changes in the use of wireless apparatus for airplanes so that navigators may determine their positions accurately by a directional finder and enable their planes to sail on through fog and thick weather with undiminished speed were suggested yesterday by Roy A. Weagant, radio expert, and chief engineer for the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of America. He declared that the use of wireless would create great ocean lanes of air travel and that airships would pass to and fro regardless of weather.

"One question which has been developed by the remarkable transatlantic flights by aircraft is the great advantage to be obtained by utilizing wireless equipment for purposes of air navigation," said Mr. Weagant. "It so happens that Captain Alcock and Lieutenant Brown employed astronomical observation for obtaining bearings, but I think the flight itself illustrates how unwise it is to depend upon this means of navigating aircraft. It is reported that for hours the moon or stars could not be seen owing to the dense fog and drizzle. Similar handicaps must be regularly expected, and it is therefore obvious that any consideration of the possibilities of cross-ocean flight on a commercial scale must make provision for navigating instruments that function without visual aid.

"There are wireless instruments now available which provide for taking bearings under any weather conditions, and for their universal application it merely remains for the radio and aircraft engineers to get together and work out the details of design within the weight and space limitations imposed by heavier-than-air craft. The layman hardly appreciates that present-day airplane wireless equipment was developed under pressure of a supreme emergency and that the apparatus has been adapted to the aircraft which existed, whereas under normal development airplane designers would have made provision for taking full advantage of the wireless equipment feature. We can expect normal development now, and there can be no question that under proper supervision air navigation will be greatly simplified and made exact by utilizing wireless aid.

"The particular apparatus which makes this possible is the Bellini-Tosi directive system, otherwise known as the goniometer, direction finder, or radio compass. The operation of this device is very simple. It comprises essentially two coils fixed at right angles and another coil which is rotated within the first two. This exploring coil is connected to the wireless receiver and is moved through the arc of a graduated scale; when the signals are heard strongest in the operator's head telephones, the movable pointer indicates the direction of the incoming signal. The geographical direction is then obtained by a glance at the compass. It may readily be seen, therefore, that if signals can be heard from two wireless stations offering a wide angle, say Clifden, Ireland, and Lyons, France, the aircraft operator flying across the ocean has merely to make a simple triangulation to get his exact bearings.

"The densest fog is no obstacle to the Echo of Liebknecht Affair.

What the Berlin Vorwärts headed, "A Sequel to the Liebknecht-Luxemburg Affair," took place in the Second Assize Court on May 27 when Edwin von Rzewuski, a locksmith in civilian life and a first-class seaman of the German Navy, was sentenced to one month's imprisonment and one week's detention under arrest for having played a minor part in the murder of Dr. Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg on Jan. 15. It appears that von Rzewuski, under what he called the influence of patriotic indignation against the Spartacide leaders, struck both of them with his fist after they had already been knocked down with a rifle by Hussar Runge as they were leaving the Hotel Eden under a military escort on their way to prison.

RUSSIA'S NEED—AMERICA'S OPPORTUNITY

Are explained in the new book "RUSSIA: HER ECONOMIC PAST AND FUTURE," by Dr. Joseph M. Goldstein, Professor of Political Economy at the Moscow Institute of Commerce and Industry and of the University of Moscow.

The book contains, aside from the text, 70 diagrams and maps showing the agricultural, industrial, commercial and financial development of Russia and the possibilities for her economic future. The book is indispensable for everyone interested in the Russian Market and in the possibilities for American-Russian economic and financial cooperation.

RUSSIA'S NATURAL RESOURCES

Russia's future lies in the development of her natural resources. Prof. Goldstein gives a detailed description of the natural resources of Russia, devoting pages of his book to the Basin of the Donetz, the Ural region, the Caucasus, Siberia and Turkestan. Full data are given with regard to Russia's minerals, forests, timber exports, furs, hides, fruit, rice and tea, silk, flax, cotton and wool.

The Basin of the Donetz

The significance of the Donetz Basin is shown by the figures, giving the production of coal, coke, iron-ore, iron, manganese and salt, for the years 1912 and 1913, in comparison with the annual production of these minerals in all of Russia: Coal, about 70%; coke, about 100%; iron-ore, about 71%; pig iron, about 57%; iron and steel, about 33%; salt, about 33%; manganese, about 30%.

The Ural Region

In the years 1912 and 1913, the Urals furnished about 20% of the total production of pig iron and about 17% of iron and steel in Russia. Now that coal fit for the production of coke has been found in the Basin of the Kusnetsk, the future of the iron industry in the Urals may be looked upon as extremely promising.

What splendid promise there is in this respect in the Urals may be seen from the fact that only one mountain, Magnitnaya, in the southern portion of this region (government of Orenburg), has resources of over 100,000,000 tons of magnetite ore. To summarize, the surveyed resources alone of high grade iron-ores in the Ural region amount to at least 500,000,000 tons.

In addition, the Urals rank first among all Russian copper producing localities. On the average, the Urals have supplied in recent years over 1,000,000 poods (about 17,000 metric tons) of copper, that means half of the total production of all Russia. Still further, the Ural region is one of the most important localities in Russia for the production of precious metals, and especially platinum. As far as this last metal is concerned, Russia has almost a world monopoly.

In the years 1912-1913 the Urals produced about 20% of the total production of gold in Russia. Russia produced in 1913 about one-fifteenth of the total world production of gold. Russia's share in this respect can be largely increased through the development of new gold mines and the improvement in the methods in gold production.

The Caucasus

The Caucasus can be mentioned as one of the richest parts of Russia. In addition to the large naphtha industry, which has won for itself an important place in the world market, the Caucasus has one of the very largest deposits of manganese and copper-ore, as well as deposits of silver and lead-ores.

To show the important role which the Caucasus has played in the realm of Russian natural economy, the following data are sufficient. The share of the Caucasus, in the total of each of the following products was: Naphtha, about 85%; copper-ore, about 31%; copper, about 30%; manganese-ore, about 70%; silver and lead-ores, about 56%; lead, about 96%; silver, about 24%.

Siberia

As regards Siberia, her natural resources are concentrated, for the most part, in the Altai Mountains, in the districts of Nerchinsk and Barguzinsk, in Ferghana, in the Yakutsk Province, in the Maritime Province and on the Island of Sakhalin.

Rich deposits of coal are found everywhere throughout Siberia. As far as gold is concerned, Siberia's share in Russia's gold production is about 80%. Rich deposits of silver, zinc, lead, tin, copper, pyrites, graphite, phosphate rock, mercuric ores, chromic ores, sulphur, semi-precious stones, rare metals (radium, vanadium, uranium), are to be found in very many places throughout Siberia. As regards forests, out of the 3,150,000,000 acres of timber-land in Russia—2,700,000,000 acres, i. e. 86%, are in Siberia.

56,450,000,000 Dollars Needed

According to careful calculations by Prof. Joseph M. Goldstein, an investment of 56,450,000,000 dollars must be made in Russian railroad construction, agriculture, industries, public utilities, etc., during the next ten years, in order to bring Russia to the minimum of the necessary economic development. Following are the main items in the table prepared by Prof. Goldstein and given fully in his new book: "Russia: Her Economic Past and Future."

New Railroads—Ten years at about 3,500 to 4,000 miles per year. Total, 35,000 to 40,000 miles at $150,000 per mile	$5,500,000,000
New locomotives, new freight and passenger cars, repair of the old locomotives and cars	3,500,000,000
Street railways, subways, pavement of towns and cities, etc.	3,000,000,000
Public roads	1,500,000,000
Inland river and canal improvements	4,000,000,000
Improvements of ports	1,000,000,000
Telephone and telegraph	1,000,000,000
Water supply, sewerage and other hygienic improvements in towns and cities	2,000,000,000
Central electric light and power stations	2,000,000,000
Public schools (7,500 primary and secondary schools in towns and cities, at a cost of $60,000 to $100,000 each; and 100,000 rural schools, at a cost of $10,000 to $20,000 each	2,000,000,000
Improvements in agricultural machinery: 16,000,000 farms at $25 per year	4,000,000,000
Improvements in cattle, poultry, stalls for cattle, etc.: 16,000,000 farms at $25 per year	4,000,000,000
Coal and coke, peat, iron and steel production	2,000,000,000
Manufacture of agricultural, electrical and other machinery and implements	1,000,000,000

Judging from the experience of the years preceding the war, it may be hoped that Russia herself will produce about half this sum. The remainder must come from abroad. It will come from abroad and especially from the United States, if the American people and their industrial and financial leaders will see the great opportunities lying before them in the great country in the East.

Russia's Economic Past and Future

There are many bright pages in the economic past of Russia and a still brighter future lies before this great and rich country.

The richest parts of Russia are already in the hands of the anti-Bolshevist forces. Siberia and the Ural region are controlled by the All-Russian Government in Omsk, led by Admiral Kolchak. The Northern Caucasus and the Basin of the Donetz are controlled by the Army of General Denikine, subordinated to the All-Russian Government in Omsk.

As soon as Russia finds herself—and she will find herself before long—she will need foreign capital for her development just as the United States needed it half a century ago. Russia's eyes turn to the United States. During the World War the United States, from a nation-debtor, has become a nation-creditor. It will be of benefit to both countries if American capital will take the same part in Russia's industrial development that foreign capital once took in the development of this country. "Trade follows investment," and the investment of American capital will help to open the Russian Market for the American merchants.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Prices Advance, but Signing of Peace Treaty Fails to Inspire Enthusiasm.

The fair degree of strength and activity which developed on Friday, chiefly inspired by the easing of the money market, was carried over into yesterday's trading, and throughout the two-hour session securities acted well. Speculative interest, as usual, was mainly concerned with the industrial issues which have been holding the Street's attention for months past, and of the thirteen stocks to show individual turnovers of 10,000 shares or more all but two or three may be classed with the so-called specialties. Of these, four enjoyed advances ranging from 2 to more than 4 points and three suffered declines. The less active stocks were generally firm and the list displayed a rather good diversification.

The signing of the Peace Treaty, news of which reached the financial district before the closing of the stock market, was received with only moderate enthusiasm. However, considering that the actual signing has long been regarded as an ultimate certainty, to be accomplished without any display of armed force other than that already made, and that about all the "good news" contained in the act had been pretty thoroughly discounted, there may be satisfaction for market optimists in the fact that prices did not react on receipt of the word that official peace had finally been consummated.

Responsible Wall Street has far too much of a serious nature to think of to give itself over to demonstrations at this time, and that part of Wall Street which has only to do with the day-to-day fluctuations has been so well tamed down that stock market pyrotechnics are not exactly in order.

The bank statement of actual condition yesterday showed further improvement in the Clearing House institutions. Loans were reduced by $19,247,000; demand deposits expanded by $11,738,000, and the excess reserve rose from $30,408,530 a week ago to $64,077,130 yesterday, the highest since the week ended with Feb. 1. United States Government deposits fell off very largely, going down to $83,685,000, against $354,967,000 the preceding week. This dissipation of Government deposits probably accounts in large part for the easing off of the money market the latter part of the week, for while it is perfectly true that the banks are not required to keep reserve against these deposits, a fact which is ordinarily supposed to help the reserve position, the actual paying out of money for Government account puts funds into circulation and helps the situation generally.

The Federal Reserve Bank showed some unusual changes. Rediscounts secured by Government war obligations declined another $16,880,600, bringing the total down to $567,632,101, the smallest since Dec. 20 last. Bills purchased in the open market, on the contrary, rose $16,695,260, making the total $100,821,612, the largest since Dec. 6, while the member banks' reserve account expanded to $730,277,932, a gain on the week of $33,721,135, making that total the largest ever reported.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

The Bankers' Equipment Plan.

Among the railroad men who have received their copies of the plan prepared by a special committee of the New York bankers for the financing of the $400,000,000 equipment ordered by the Railroad Administration last year, there seems to be a consensus of opinion in favor of the recommendations made. The plan provides for the furnishing of most of the funds by the Railroad Administration and for the purchase of the equipment by the carriers, payments to be spread over a fair period. It does not cover the allocation of the equipment to the different roads. The member roads of the Association of Railway Executives must vote on the plan before a decision by the association is announced. In the meantime Director General Hines and Swager Shirley of the Railroad Administration—the latter represented the Railroad Administration at conferences held in New York some time ago—will probably digest the suggestions contained in the plan, and it is expected that they will make the text public before long.

Deferred Maintenance.

Some of the corporate railroad managers who are faced each year with the necessity for crowding their track work into a limited period of months are becoming more and more dissatisfied with the progress being made by the Railroad Administration in the work of right of way replacements. The Vice President of one of the roads in this district said yesterday that not only has the Administration failed to maintain the replacements of last year, which was admitted to be the worst for some time—but it has not made any of the deficit in replacements of 1918, and the property now faces a Winter without a sufficient supply of ballast, ties and rails properly to keep up its right of way.

The Clover Leaf Allocation.

With many of the railroads of the country at loggerheads with the Railroad Administration over the allocations of equipment by the former Director General, the final outcome of one of these disagreements is attracting considerable attention. Former Director General of Railroads McAdoo allocated 1,250 freight cars to the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad in 1918. The road refused to accept the equipment, and appealed, through its receiver, to the Federal District Court in Toledo for a restraining injunction. Then the receiver went to Washington, and the Railroad Administration finally agreed that the road should take only 350 of the cars. In looking this case over other operators are asking who will be responsible for the other 900 cars, and whether they should be written off by the Railroad Administration as one of the costs of the war or not.

Corn Products a Favorite.

Corn Products common was one of the favorites in yesterday's half-holiday trading session. On a turnover that for Saturday was heavy, the stock sold up to 82¾ and closed for the day with a net gain of more than 2 points. When the forward movement in this issue began some months ago there were reports of buying by large conservative interests and it now seems that there has been a steady accumulation of the stock. The outlook for the future of the company is generally considered bright, as the signing of the peace treaty is expected to open broad fields in Europe for the consumption of the company's products.

Rubber Stocks Advance.

Ajax Rubber was a leader among the rubber shares, this issue advancing 4 points. The upturn in this stock was sufficient to impart strength throughout the entire rubber group. Goodrich and United States Rubber were features of the market. The latter moved forward into new high ground, touching 136¾, from which there was a reaction of only ⅝ of a point. Another cut in tire prices is anticipated, but even with this taken into consideration it is believed that substantial profits will accrue to the rubber companies. It is estimated that the tire business was about 30 per cent. of the total gross of the United States Rubber Company during last year.

Steel Shares in Demand.

There was a steady demand for the steel stocks yesterday, although the advances recorded were not by any means as sensational as in some of the other groups. It has been established beyond question that the steel companies are increasing their business activities, and with this in mind it is not hard to imagine that earnings will increase even though prices are still holding close to the stabilization figures. The course of prices has been rather erratic. In several instances quotations have advanced over those which were mentioned in the original adoption of the Redfield plan, while in others there has been a reduction. Taking the steel industry as a whole, it is estimated that the present operations are about 65 per cent. of capacity. This is something like a gain of 10 per cent. over the May standard of production. Orders are accumulating and this may indicate that unfilled tonnage will show a gain over May, when the figures of the United States Steel Corporation are announced for June. That which applies to the Steel Corporation may also apply to the smaller companies.

Mexican Oil Wells.

Reports continue to come forth now and then of salt water appearing in Mexican oil wells. Sometimes there is only a trace, but occasionally, as in the case of Potrero del Llano No. 4, a well is actually ruined. The instances where a well has turned entirely to salt water are the exception, but the appearance of salt water with the oil is not particularly unusual, especially where a well has been flowing for some years. The very fact that salt water does appear is, however, disconcerting. The theory which obtains is that the Mexican oil is floated on salt water, in which case there must eventually be the substitution of salt water for oil. If the Mexican wells all tapped the same pool there might be grounds for fear that the oil would give out before a great length of time. The pressures at the various wells are, however, different, so that in the majority of cases the drilling has tapped a large number of disassociated pools. The fact remains that a well cannot go on indefinitely giving a production of thousands of barrels a day, and if there is uncertainty as to the quantity, the price of fuel oil may increase, for there would be no incentive of over production. Before it was ruined the Potrero del Llano well produced approximately 100,000,000 barrels of oil.

Railroad Financing.

The action of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad in selling $35,000,000 bonds to provide for its requirements through this year, has been interpreted in some railroad quarters as a wise move, and in others furnishes food for thought. The Director General of Railroads has said that he favored having the carriers do as much of their own financing as they could this year, notwithstanding the fact that such financing will further strain a credit already severely weakened. The railroad contract provides for a return of the properties in substantially as good condition as when they were taken over, but it is generally acknowledged that this is almost impossible in the case of a number of the individual roads. The increase in freight rates must come eventually, according to many operators, who believe that it would be only right for the Railroad Administration to announce the increase before handing the carriers back.

Italy's Demand for Petroleum

Italy is paying high for its petroleum—about $208 per metric ton, as against $87 at normal rates. The country's annual normal consumption is 120,000 metric tons. In 1919, it is estimated, the quantity required will be in excess of this amount. The anticipated increasing consumption of petroleum in the after-the-war period by European countries is one of the many signs pointing to the continuously accelerated development of the oil industry generally.

ADVOCATES PRIVATE TRADE EXTENSION

National Park Bank Places Little Dependence on Governmental Enterprise.

URGES SINGLE CORPORATION

Circular Discusses Measures to Meet Demand for Our Products Abroad.

It is imperative that a way be found to continue the expansion of American foreign trade at a time when virtually the whole world is clamoring for our products and materials, according to a circular which has been issued by the National Park Bank. The belief is expressed that relief must come from private sources without too great a reliance on the Government. Quoting the figures of the Federal Reserve Board, it is asserted that $3,000,000,000 must be provided from private initiative during the balance of the year if the United States is to be able to continue its foreign trade at the present level.

In discussing the situation the bank says:

"Negotiations are now under way for the solution of the complicated problems involved in furnishing adequate credit facilities for the rehabilitation of European countries. A committee has been appointed to formulate a broad plan of action to provide the relief that is needed by both belligerent and neutral nations. This being by far the greatest credit for commercial purposes that has ever been undertaken by this nation, it is felt that private capital and initiative must predominate in the enterprise in order to secure the best results.

"To achieve these results it is considered advisable to create as soon as possible one heavily capitalized corporation with sufficient resources to finance all justified needs. The corporation's capital will probably be subscribed for by a large variety of stockholders, partly banking and partly industrial and commercial interests. Several committees to study the special features may be appointed in an effort carefully to consider the facilities needed by various branches of trade, with the idea of keeping in touch with all credit requirements connected with our foreign commerce. It has been suggested that a nation-wide syndicate be formed to mobilize our country's credit resources, and informal conferences have been held looking toward the appointment of a general committee to co-ordinate and undertake the work.

Need of $3,000,000,000.

"The Federal Reserve Board estimates that fully $3,000,000,000 must be provided by private initiative during the balance of this year if the United States is to continue its foreign trade at the present high level. This estimate is principally based upon the fact that this country will have a favorable trade balance at the close of the fiscal year now ending of more than $3,000,000,000. There is to be considered, in addition, the sum due the United States for interest and dividends upon American holdings of foreign securities—principally governmental and municipal—estimated at $600,000,000 annually, as well as a similar amount which must be provided by Europe during the coming year to pay off maturing loans held in this country.

"Under the present law advances to foreign countries by the United States Treasury are limited to $10,000,000,000, of which $9,500,000,000 has been used and most of the balance allocated to different countries. Under the recent amendment of the War Finance Corporation act, the corporation is authorized to lend $1,000,000,000 to American exporters to enable them to sell American goods abroad on credit and to bankers financing such exports. This assistance is available only in cases where the borrowers cannot obtain the usual banking assistance. All competent observers will agree with the Federal Reserve Board that "it is not desirable that Government direction of private industry should be continued longer than is absolutely essential."

"It is imperative, however, that a way be found to continue the expansion of American foreign trade at a time when virtually the whole world is clamoring for our products and materials. The relief must come chiefly from private interest without too great reliance being placed upon the Government or upon the rediscount facilities of the Federal Reserve System. On this point A. C. Miller of the Federal Reserve Board the other day, in addressing the National Hardware Association, declared that abuse of the credit facilities of the Federal Reserve System would be almost certain to result in further and dangerous inflation of credit. He added: 'No method of providing for the financing of Europe that does not contain careful safeguards against this contingency can be regarded as satisfactory. What Europe needs is capital. The Federal Reserve Banks are not investment institutions; they deal in credit, not capital. The attempt under any disguise to use their facilities as a substitute for capital would be fatal to the Federal Reserve System and injurious to the public at large.'

"The American Chamber of Commerce in London has gone on record as saying that the United States must purchase more foreign securities and goods if the prices at which American products at the present rate of exchange must sell are to be and remain competitive. It adds that the shortage of tonnage continues to keep American goods from the British market. This need is clearly apparent since the continued high price of dollar credits at foreign markets is a serious obstacle in the way of sustained development of our export trade. As a prominent European banker expressed himself to us the other day, 'The American dollar is the scarcest commodity in Europe today.'

Cites Foreign Bond Issues.

"During the past month Sweden has placed a $25,000,000 bond issue with American bankers upon terms which show an investment yield to present owners of about 6¼ per cent. A $10,000,000 Rio de Janeiro municipal loan was largely oversubscribed at an investment basis of about 6½ per cent. An endeavor should be made to keep the interest rate within reasonable limits and deal with the European borrower in the same way as he European lender has dealt with the American borrower in the past. There is no intention to grant credits for sentimental reasons, as we recognize that our own prosperity is largely dependent upon the successful conclusion of our investment program.

"On account of the exceptional trading opportunities during the war, the United States saw its wealth increase to a figure estimated in excess of $250,000,000,000. Should ultimately one-tenth of this colossal wealth be invested abroad, American ofreign trade would be a large beneficiary of such a state of affairs.

"It is obvious that efforts must be made to broaden our home market for foreign securities. There exists a wide field for such investments hitherto unexplored and, under proper guidance, such ventures can be attempted with utmost safety provided the risk is properly restricted so as to avoid undue investments in single securities. This movement will receive fresh impetus after the world becomes accustomed to doing business under the new order of things provided by the peace compact.

"It is an extraordinary situation indeed, but one which holds out vast promise for the development of American investment and world trade opportunities. Above all it is imperative that we abandon our old policy of provincialism and that we look with the same favor upon a well made investment in France as we look upon our holdings in a well managed domestic enterprise.

"As soon as a line of principal credit needs is determined upon, the main difficulty will present itself in finding the proper and safest way to distribute credits abroad. This problem offers one of the strongest arguments in favor of creating one large corporation instead of several investment companies independent of each other. We are naturally dependent upon and may expect to obtain full support of foreign Governments, but we may need besides practical assistance, and it would seem that a solution would be found by having some prominent European banking interests participate with us in investments with which we hitherto had no experience and which, therefore, are difficult for us to analyze. The difficulties which the company's forces are apt to encounter in foreign territories would be greatly reduced by the formation of partnerships abroad wherever desirable or necessary.

"It is generally recognized that the European wheels of industry should be set turning with the least possible delay so as to check further social unrest and revolutionary tendencies. It therefore will not do to extend assistance in spots but a blanket policy must be adopted so as not to assist certain centres in great need without touching others, in the effort to avoid jealousy and ill feeling and, as a consequence, more pronounced economic disturbance."

Our Free Record Book Will

Simplify Your Income Tax Return

The work of making out your Income Tax returns each year can be greatly simplified, first, by understanding the Income Tax provisions, and, second, by recording accurately and systematically your income as it is received.

To accomplish this purpose, we have prepared a 24-page Record Book, 8½ x 11 inches, which provides for accurately recording by months various forms of income—both taxable and exempt; also places for allowable deductions.

The book also contains a brief synopsis of the Federal Income Tax Law and a concise statement of the tax exemption features of the various Liberty Bond issues.

By the use of this book, you can avoid a great deal of unnecessary annoyance in making your Income Tax returns.

We shall be pleased to mail a copy upon request to those desiring it. Address Department S. E.

LOOK FOR RENEWED DEMAND FOR STEEL

Manufacturers Expect Boom in Construction Projects Following Signing of Peace Treaty.

NO NEW ADVANCE IN PRICES

United States Steel Corporation Decides to Maintain Present Quotations for Remainder of Year.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, June 28.—The signing of the Peace Treaty is expected to result in approval being given to the inception of many construction projects involving the use of steel, and which have been held back pending the event. Long ago many investors adopted the policy that the period between the cessation of hostilities and the signing of the Peace Treaty should be regarded as an interim period, and have been unwilling to enter into large undertakings.

The character of the steel market in the last few months has shown clearly that investment buying of steel is practically the only thing lacking to make a complete market. The demand for steel for everyday consumption has been good, and in some cases far above any previous record. This is true, for instance, of the demand for steel for automobile construction, and is probably true also of the oil-country goods produced by pipe mills and of steel sheets used in the electrical industry.

For steel used in construction purposes, on the other hand, there has been a relatively light demand, and it is in that direction that steel demand needs theless, only 49 per cent. of the fabricated steel jobs in May were double those of April, they represented, nevertheless, only 49 per cent. of the afbricating capacity of the structural shops. Reports thus far this month indicate that the month will show a substantial gain over May.

The only other class of steel buying that has been distinctly below normal has been railroad buying. Until recently it had been held quite generally that a large volume of railroad buying was essential for full operation of the steel industry, and as such buying could hardly be expected for this year, it was thought that the steel industry would be unlikely to operate at capacity before next Spring.

A different view is now entertained in many quarters, it being thought that the mills may fill up without the railroads, whereby when they do come into the market they will experience difficulty in obtaining desired deliveries. There is a divergence of opinion as to what the railroads will need. The Railroad Administration takes the position that it is maintaining the properties, while there are many who assert that it is not. The chief railroad buying, when it does come, will be for improvements rather than for maintenance. The steel trade learns that the Railroad Administration is about to place orders for 300,000 tons of rails, following the purchase of 200,000 tons a few weeks ago, and that this will complete the rail program for the year.

Expect Prices to Remain at Present Level.

The steel market had no sooner divested itself, only a few weeks ago, of the prospect that there would be further declines in prices than predictions began to appear that prices were going to advance. There have been reports that wire products in particular would be advanced very shortly, and reports that steel prices in general would advance. Those who predicted advances did not take seriously the fact that mills are not operating at capacity. While no formal announcement has been made, it is a fact that the United States Steel Corporation has decided as a general policy that there should be no price advances for the remainder of the year, and that settles the matter unless fundamental conditions should change very radically.

Steel mills have operated in the last week at about 65 per cent. of capacity, which compares with a rate of not much above 50 per cent. at one time last month, while the average rate for the month was 54 per cent., against 65 per cent in April. Thus the steel industry has rounded the turn.

After making very strong demands in connection with the sheet and tin mill wage scales for the year beginning July 1, the Amalgamated Association has reached an agreement with the union mills, numbering less than half the total in the sheet and tin plate industries, whereby some members of the rolling crew will obtain a 10 per cent. increase in pay. The total wages paid will be increased by about 3.6 per cent. at sheet mills and 2.6 per cent at tin mills, only the tonnage men at the hot mills being covered by the wage scales. The non-union mills pay substantially union wages, and in many cases a trifle over.

The pig iron markets have become quiet again, but prices are steadier and at the level of March 21. More than half the furnace coke business for the second half of the year is now actually under contract or virtually closed, the great bulk of it on the one basis, 6½ to 1 against basic pig iron at Valley furnaces. There is a moderate volume of foundry coke still available at $4.50 for prompt shipment, but the well-known brands are bringing $4.75 and $5 right along without difficulty. Coke values may thus be quoted as follows: Furnace, $4; spot foundry, $4.50@$5; contract foundry, $5@$5.50.

In the last two or three weeks about 40,000 tons of Government scrap in this district have been absorbed by dealers, all of it at good prices, while some of the prices paid were obviously higher than the dealers could realize by selling on the present market to consumers. The major part of the material was rough forgings for shells at the Westinghouse works, the Standard works at Butler, the Standard Sanitary works in Allegheny, and other points. The highest price reported as paid was $18.65, free on board the shipping points. There was also a round lot of Canadian scrap bought at $14.75, free on board, involving $5 freight to Pittsburgh, making $19.75.

Consumers of heavy melting steel do not seem to have any definite idea as to what they ought to pay, and it does not seem that any consumer has an open bid out. The dealers have their own ideas as to values and prospective values and are not pressing to make sales, as they feel that all the chances are for the scrap market advancing. The market is quotable at $17.50 to $18.50. While Youngstown and Cleveland mills have paid over $18 Pittsburgh mills have not, and it is not certain that they paid as high as $18. On the other hand, dealers have bought Government scrap at prices that would be in relation to a higher price than this for ordinary heavy melting. Demand for scrap from foundries is of rather moderate proportions, while demand from rolling mills is distinctly light.

Demand for Wire Products.

Demand for wire products, particularly nails, continues very good. Nail departments are practically sold up for several weeks. While talk of a prospective advance in prices has not died out the recent Jones & Laughlin advance in export prices, 20 cents a keg on nails and $2 a ton on other wire products, certainly has not developed a following, even in the export market. Some of the producers of coated nails object to statements that their product is being shaded 10 cents a keg from the regular basis of $2.85, yet there seems to be no doubt that some producers have been shading to this extent.

Iron bar demand in the Pittsburgh district has been so light that prices have not been equalized. In the East and in Chicago and more Western territory there has been enough business to establish regular prices. Thus the Chicago mills quote on iron bars 2.35c. Pittsburgh, as long as the freight is not against them, but when shipping against their freight, or toward Pittsburgh, they would not quote that basis. The Eastern Pennsylvania mills likewise quote 2.35c. Pittsburgh, but would not ship west on that basis, as that would be against their freight.

The real competition occurs in Southern territory, which can draw from so many different districts. Pennsylvania and Chicago mills, for instance, must compete with Louisville, St. Louis and other mills to get into Southern territory. Prices quoted for Southern delivery cannot, however, be reduced to a basis of f. o. b. mill and then converted into prices delivered in Northern territory, as the mills would not name as low prices for such delivery. Thus one mill would ship South on the basis of 2.20c at mill but would not name anything like such a price for nearby delivery.

Sheet mill operations this week have been at about 75 per cent. of capacity, representing a sharp increase in the last few weeks. The American Sheet and Tin Plate Company operated this week at 75 per cent. The independent mills came up from a 57 per cent. operation in the first half of May to 70 per cent. this week. The Inland Steel Company has announced its withdrawal from the market, being comfortably filled with business and having its sheet mills in practically full operation. This company is about to make a large increase in its sheet producing capacity, but has not decided precisely the number of mills or the kind of mills it will add. A portion of the new capacity will be for the production of automobile sheets, and as many as ten sheet mills may be added altogether.

Prosperity reigns in the tubular goods line, especially in the demand for butt weld and lap weld pipe, which is getting better every week, the mills now falling behind in their deliveries. Bookings of butt weld pipe are in the neighborhood of 75 per cent. of capacity and are increasing every week. As heretofore, the lap weld demand is chiefly from the oil-country interests.

There is a light demand for billets, the producers continuing in their belief that $38.50 is too low a price for four-inch billets, while the buyers seem content to wait developments, believing that the price will go even lower than that. There has been a slight improvement in demand for sheet bars. There is no contracting, the sheet mills just placing orders from week to week as they require the goods.

COTTON DECLINES IN NERVOUS MARKET

PEACE BRINGS NO RESULTS

Traders' Views of Probable Effect of Government Statement at Variance.

The cotton market yesterday was nervous and erratic, and fluctuations were decidedly mixed. The several options did not always move together, but when some months got "out of line" there were prompt readjustments. At the start the tone was good, and an opening advance of 10 to 13 points was run into net gains of 5 to 10 points more, so that at the top, which was reached in the first half hour, the market stood at levels 17 to 21 points above Friday's closing. Then selling pressure developed, and the list reacted rather sharply, going off 35 to 40 points, where it hung for a time, only to ease off more just before the close of business, which was made at net declines of 38 to 45 points on the day.

The signing of the Peace Treaty failed to influence either buying or selling. Most of the selling was in liquidation of long contracts bought on earlier days, and doubtless would have appeared whether or not there had been any Peace Treaty. The trade was inclined to believe that the market had advanced far enough for the time being, and as long profits had developed into very material proportions, and considering the week-end holiday, profit-taking was perfectly natural.

It will be interesting to see what tomorrow's market brings forth. Yesterday many of the keenest traders were sure the market had discounted a very poor Government statement, which will be out on Tuesday, and felt that prices might go slightly lower after the report was published, just as it did last month. Others, however, were as optimistic as ever and were making predictions of a further rise even before the Government statement.

The following shows the statistical position of cotton figured by the Financial Chronicle:

South America Asks Help of Our Markets and Credits

"SOUTH AMERICA'S Place in Our Rising Sun of Trade" is the subject of the leading article in tomorrow's issue of THE ANNALIST. Cut off from commerce during the war, our neighbor continent now asks to share with Europe the benefits of United States markets and credits.

An economic observer, writing in THE ANNALIST, finds human nature a great stumbling block in the way of applying our war-born spirit of co-operation to trade and commerce. Many today are sure that we have borrowed enough of the ways and methods of the tenets of socialism.

The old system of open accounts and promissory notes, says a third contributor, is stubbornly resisting the advance of the European method of trade financing through acceptances.

GERMANY MAY LOSE ALL GOLD RESERVES

Payments for Food Expected to Drain All from Vaults of Reichsbank.

HAD ACQUIRED VAST SUM

In Three Years Preceding War German Official Bank Had Stored Up More Than $400,000,000.

The report of the German Reichsbank issued on June 15 shows another big falling off in the bank's gold holdings, which form virtually the only gold reserve Germany has. The loss for the week under report was approximately $36,000,000, and makes the total lost by the institution since the signing of the armistice, last November, slightly more than $330,000,000, or more than half of the gold Germany held at the cessation of hostilities. The total then was $606,-535,000. In the last report the total is $274,059,000.

The present figures represent an amount smaller than any reported since the end of 1913, when gold holdings by the Imperial German Bank were about on a parity with those of the present time. Within the next few months, it is believed, Germany will have little of the metal, if the Allies insist upon payment in gold for food and other supplies which Germany has asked them to advance her. Even before payment is started on the indemnity, bankers on this side expect that Germany will have ceased to be a holder of gold in any large amount.

Before 1910 Germany was never regarded as a great accumulator of gold at her State bank. Her enormous private banks were rich, and usually were in position to draw upon the London market for needed gold. Their own settlements usualy were made in credits, and the Reichsbank never tried to build up the big gold reserves carried by the Bank of France and the Bank of Russia and, to a less extent, the Imperial Bank of Austria-Hungary. All of these institutions, with the three official Italian banks—the Bank of Ialy, at Rome, and the Banks of Naples and Sicily—far exceeded the Reichsbank in point of gold actually held in their vaults.

In 1910 the German bank started to accumulate gold. At the end of that year it held $157,459,000. At the same time the Bank of Russia held $634,300,-000; the Bank of France held $632,924,-000; that of Austria-Hungary $267,543,-000, while the combination of Italian banks held $238,544,000. Two years later the German bank had advanced its holdings to $184,998,000 and at the end of 1913 it had in its possession $278,-000,000, and stood third among the European state banks. Its reserves were exceeded only by the French and Russian official banks.

At the outbreak of the war the Reichsbank had $410,016,000 in gold, representing a gain of $252,557,000 in the three and one-half years since December, 1910. In the five first months of the war, or until the end of 1914, the increase in gold holdings was no less than $80,000,000, and in 1915 about $90,000,000 more was added to the stock. Part of this, it is believed, came from the Austro-Hungarian Bank. Part was taken from banks in Belgium and Northern France, and a considerable amount came from the German people, who not only turned in to the Government all the gold money they possessed, but also exchanged gold jewelry and plate for Reichsbank notes.

From the end of 1916, when the Imperial Bank's gold had risen to approximately $600,000,000, to the signing of the armistice last November there were only slight changes, which amounted to little in the aggregate. On two or three occasions Germany made fairly large gold payments to some of the European neutrals, but these were more or less offset by the thin stream of gold which continued to flow into the Reichsbank, and, after Brest-Litovsk, by gold payments which Germany received from Russia.

With the signing of the armistice the German gold began to flow out of the country. Almost immediately the Allies demanded that Germany turn over gold stolen from the invaded districts in the west and some of the gold paid by Russia, the latter to be held in trust until a stable Government is re-established at Petrograd. When food supplies were sought by the Germans the Allies demanded and received more gold. The outgo from Germany has been steady. From $606,735,000 in November last, the amount had declined to about $450,000,000 in March, and $40,000,000 more was paid out in April; slightly more than $100,000,000 in May and nearly $40,000,000 in the first half of June.

At the present time the gold holdings of the German State bank are less than those of the banks of England, France, Italy, and Japan, among the Allies, and less than those of Spain and Holland in the neutral group.

Chicago "L" May Defer Interest.

It was announced in the financial district yesterday that the Chicago Elevated Railways would not be able to pay the interest due July 1, 1919, on $14,000,000 two-year 5 per cent. gold notes, which were extended to that date at 6 per cent. In anticipation of the inability of the company to pay the interest the following noteholders' committee has been formed: Charles E. Mitchell, President of the National City Company, chairman; George M. Reynolds, Chicago; John H. Mason, Philadelphia; T. H. Given, Pittsburgh, and R. F. Clinch, Chicago. K. W. Barry of 55 Wall Street is Secretary of the committee.

The meaning in United Retail Stores CORPORATION

In May and June, 1912, Dow, Jones & Co. in its financial news bulletins and The Wall Street Journal expounded the principles under the UNITED CIGAR STORES CO.

Retail Stores as Investments

Until recently railroad transportation was the expanding business of the United States, absorbing the major portion of the accumulating investment funds of the country. Now capital is turning steadily to industrial enterprises.

President Whelan, of the United Cigar Stores Co., to which the Supreme Court has just given a clean bill of health by forcing out the American Tobacco Co. and twenty-eight co-defendants from ownership therein, tells his friends that manufacturing and retailing are the only lines left for profitable enterprise.

He has backed his opinion with his fortune and purchased from the defendant litigants all their remaining United Cigar Stores Co. shares at under $200 per share, thus assuring himself practical control of the business he has been all his life developing.

What his profit in the future may be is not of such general interest as is a valuation of the business principles which enable this company to cut the prices of standard goods 15 to 20 per cent., proclaim that a nickel in the dollar is all the retail profits it seeks, and yet maintain the faith that retailing is to be in this country one of the great bases for investments.

"Retail business is the biggest business in the world," said George J. Whelan in May, 1912, as he landed from the Lusitania after a four-months trip in England. During this trip the cables were kept warm and his interests in United Cigar Stores were very much increased as the decision of the Supreme Court dissolved its conection with the American Tobacco Co.

In June, 1912, Dow, Jones & Co. and The Wall Street Journal and their allied financial publications expounded the principles underlying the organization of the United Cigar Stores Co. The stock was then selling at under $210 per share. Soon after it sold at $260. Later each stockholder received in reorganization three shares for one.

The quotation of United Cigar Stores made this month of $167 per share means $501 per share for the old stock upon which present stockholders are receiving $27 per share as formerly held. Through peace and war it has maintained and increased its dividends.

The proposal now under consideration is to enlarge the scope of the organization, give two shares for each present share outstanding and still further solidify the investment base under the concern.

To this end, United Retail Stores Corporation has been organized, and George J. Whelan, James B. Duke and their associates have initially paid in $70 per share in cash for the first 50,000 shares of the new company. The capital is to be expanded by the issue of two shares for each of the 270,000 shares of United Cigar Stores stock and possibly later the holders of $4,500,000 United Cigar Stores 7% preferred stock will be glad to exchange for Retail Stores share for share.

The new stock will have no par value. There will also be issued founders' stock to take the place of the present bonus plan in operation in the management of United Cigar Stores.

This plan is novel and is destined to attract wide attention. It is in effect a profit-sharing plan for those who are expected to build up and expand the organization and continue with it. The stock will be sold to such at $5 per share and it will receive the regular dividends paid upon the other shares. But employes can not sell this stock except to the company, which will buy the same in the event of the death of the beneficiary, paying therefore the market price of the regular stock and also for any value shown in such shares above the market price.

This plan gives the beneficiary immediate insurance valuable to his family or his estate. It is in effect his contract and bonus. If he received this stock under contract and paid therefor $5 per share and died the next day, his family or estate would immediately receive for each share $100, if that was the market price for the vendable shares.

His incentive is therefore to upbuild the trade and good-will of this company and give value to these shares quoted this week at $84 and which are expected to be in the future steadily appreciating premium certificates.

United Cigar Stores will keep its trade-mark and organization and as such will seek to secure more than its present $65,-000,000 gross of the $1,200,000,000 tobacco business in this country.

But the interesting feature of the new organization is that the United Cigar Stores becomes only one branch in the general plan of the Retail Stores organization, which proposes unlimited expansion in the general retail business.

United Retail Stores Corporation is organized to hold and develop companies with valuable going trade-marks.

The fundamental principle of the new concern is that it will never buy a business without the men, the organization and value in the same with trade-marked and popular articles.

It will also have the same principles as those underlying the success of the United Cigar Stores. It will not be a promotion to be floated. It is to be directed and managed by the men who have their fortunes and their future in it.

It has been the life ambition of George J. Whelan to expand into a larger retail organization. It is the present ambition of James B. Duke—for whom increment of wealth can hold little attraction—to wrestle with the problem of distribution of goods with reduced cost to the consumer.

Mr. Whelan and his family propose to turn into the new company 65,000 shares of United Cigar Stores stock and take 130,000 shares of the new Retail Stores Corporation, and he believes in so doing he is perpetuating and enlarging his life work and giving continuity to the same upon an investment basis.

Indeed, he has expressed a desire that as United Cigar Stores disappears from Wall Street, so in time may the shares of the Retail Stores Corporation disappear from Wall Street and represent entirely a business investment proposition managed by the workers and largely owned by them.

The United Cigar Stores never had a director that was not a worker in the concern and Whelan and Duke will be the leading workers in the new Retail Stores Corporation.

The United States offers no sport for rich men like that of business development and the expanding of industrial and merchandising organizations building for the workers, the consumers and the investors.

The real estate department, with its success in selection of locations, was fundamental in the success of United Cigars. Business location, trade-marks and brain organizations are expected to continue its success in the new United Retail Stores Corporation.

It is just such careful financial news presentations and studies in values—and the business principles that make values—that have advanced the Dow, Jones & Co. financial bulletins and The Wall Street Journal to their present commanding position as the leading collectors and distributers of financial news in the United States.

While the Dow, Jones Electric Page Printer flashes the news by which financial centres all over the country are quickly informed on passing events, sound finance is not built from flashes, but from steady reading of the Dow, Jones & Co. bulletins, which go to make up The Wall Street Journal and constitute the investors' guide in finance.

The Dow, Jones & Co. bulletins and The Wall Street Journal should be daily read and studied by every man who hopes to be an intelligent investor.

These give all the facts and factors upon which fortunes are founded, and where these facts and factors are ignored, overlooked, forgotten, or not studied, fortunes are lost.

RESTORATION IN FRANCE.

Work Now Going On to Put the Industries in Shape Again.

Industrial conditions in France have been regarded in a rather pessimistic light by American business men and other observers who have taken a serious view of the French restrictive measures on imports, the destruction wrought in that country by the war, and the danger to its markets in the wholesale disposal of army supplies. Commercial Attaché Chauncey Depew Snow at Paris, who has studied French industrial conditions, in a recent report, finds no great cause for disaster to the commercial fabric of the country. On the contrary, the first effects of the operation of the law for the reparation of damages caused by the war, put into effect on April 17, found in less than a month a number of manufacturers and merchants ready to resume operations.

The company formed in France and known as the Comptoir Central d'Achats Industriels pour les Regions Envahies is now making purchases of industrial equipment for the devastated regions at the rate of 6,000,000 francs a day. In compliance with the French program it is buying everything possible in France, but, when it is absolutely necessary for urgent reconstruction, purchases are made outside the country. The arrangement now in force provides the claimant for war damages a preliminary advance of 25 per cent. of this claim and even additional funds are authorized under certain conditions.

While the company named above makes only purchases of industrial equipment, the Ministry of the Liberated Regions makes all the purchases incidental to the restoration and reorganization of local housing and social life, building materials, barracks and other temporary housing accommodations, road repair, transportation generally, and those things necessary for agricultural reconstruction. These purchases are made against individual indemnity claims.

A great number of villages and many of the larger communities have been so completely wiped off the map, the attaché states, that no effort will be made to rebuild them. When a village or town has important natural advantages, the coal mines at Lens for instance, there is no question of rebuilding. At Lens the clearing of the streets and the removal of débris is well under way. A great many of the villages reduced to practically a hopeless state will be rebuilt because the inhabitants own good land in the neighborhood and will continue to depend upon it for a living.

Where a plant or mill remains physically intact, although the machinery may have been damaged to a greater or less degree, it has been used by the enterprising manufacturer as a basis for necessary credit to finance the repairs and the resumption of work.

Possibly two-thirds of the land included in the devastated regions is being easily put into cultivation again, although the loss of agricultural machinery is keenly felt. Road repairs and inland transportation have been taken in hand and in the former the use of troops and prisoners has proved of considerable help.

The protective reasons for a policy of certain restrictions on imports has been obvious when the opposition of the dealers to the flooding of the market with foreign merchandise is considered. The merchants and manufacturers, however, are not wholeheartedly in favor of this extreme policy, and a liberalizing of the measures is thought imminent. In fact, critics of the policy say that it is slowing up the work of reconstruction in view of the necessity of getting equipment quickly in order to resume operations.

Where the army supplies are concerned, the French appear anxious to get as much as possible of the engineering material, but in other classes of supplies dealers object to the release of the stores at low prices that will ruin the market. Others view the situation in a different light, figuring that, while the market will be removed for a while, products will be introduced on which later they will obtain large new and upkeep orders.

There is no general air of despondency, the attaché reports, and sentiment is that when the Peace Conference has completed its work, the demobilization and transportation back of the armies are well along, the individual claims for indemnification are settled, and the work of industrial and general reconstruction gets a little more impetus, the market will show more activity and buoyancy.

Big Japanese Steel Works.

Japan seems determined to become independent in its steel supply. Among the concerns already engaged in this industry is the Oriental Steel Company, incorporated for $25,000,000, with works covering 260 acres at Tobata. The company began turning out its products in April.

The Merchant's Point of View

At this period of midyear inventories, two factors loom up large as potent in affecting future trade and industrial prospects. These are peace and prohibition, which are to go into effect at about the same time. Although the first mentioned is much the more important and far-reaching in its effects, many of which are as yet obscure, the other factor is one by no means to be ignored. Taking the lesser of the two first into consideration, it is regarded that prohibition—when once strictly enforced—is likely to affect the labor situation profoundly by causing discontent and by reducing the number of workers. The discontent may be only temporary, but while it lasts it will curtail production. The reduction in the number of workers will come in two ways. The first of these, already in evidence, is the increasing tendency of foreigners here to leave the country for some other one where their personal liberty will not be interfered with. The other is that the mere fact that wine and beer are forbidden here will turn the tides of immigration to other lands offering similar opportunities without this drawback. Workers in European countries, from which the bulk of immigrants have been wont to come, cannot understand the kind of liberty which interferes with their lifelong habits and the customs under which they and their forbears have lived for centuries. The net result promises to be an insufficiency of skilled and unskilled labor and the accompanying curtailment of production and rising costs.

What Is to Follow Peace.

As to the effect of peace on both domestic and foreign trade, this is a matter on which there is a wide divergence of opinion due mainly to the fact that German industrial conditions are not very well defined, and also to the uncertainty that prevails as to how long certain restrictions on imports and exports in different countries are to continue. Back of all this, too, is the matter of financing foreign trade, the difficulties of which are enhanced by the situation in exchange. These things, furthermore, do not take into account the effect of any prejudice there may be against dealing in anything "made in Germany." It may be that undue emphasis has been placed by some on the last named circumstance, and there are some recent happenings which bear out this idea. Typical among them is the fact reported that German goods have been taken without reluctance in Serbia, whose inhabitants cannot be accused of any partiality toward Germany. So, too, the Italians have discovered that, as the lira has a higher quotation in terms of the German mark than in those of the American dollar, they can buy German goods cheaper than American. Then, too, there are provisions in the treaty of peace providing for certain reciprocal trade concessions between Germany and Austria and the territories severed from them like Alsace-Lorraine, Poland, Jugoslavonia, &c., which insure a certain amount of commerce to the former Central Powers. Another circumstance which is bound to have some effect in the same direction is that peoples in foreign countries accustomed before the war to take distinctive German goods are apt to resume taking them in place of the substitutes they have been getting.

The Matter of German Competition.

Practically all commercial treaties in operation before the war have gone into the discard. European nations are working under temporary extensions, modified by special import and export restrictions. Two considerations are in view. One is to stimulate domestic industries, and the other is to avoid any unfavorable rate of exchange. These things will be matters to be adjusted as soon as possible. Until they are foreign trade cannot be normal. How much Germany's re-entrance as an exporter will have on such trade is one of the things that have many guessing. That country will at once begin to supply electrical apparatus and installations in several contiguous territories. It will also supply a lot of dyes, drugs and chemicals, potash salts, toys, china and glassware, cutlery and considerable machinery, and other iron and steel products. It does not appear likely that it will figure for a year or more as an exporter of textiles, although this is dependent on how much raw material has been stored in neutral countries for German account. The amount of such material is conjectural, although it has been repeatedly asserted that quantities of wool, cotton, rubber, copper, &c., are so held. The crippling of Germany's mercantile marine is likely to prove a serious drawback in the efforts to get trade from afar in the immediate future, and will probably lead to more intensive efforts to secure business with neighboring nations. The higher production cost in Germany will be offset by the same thing in other competitive countries.

How Long Can the Buying Keep Up?

A merchant of Pittsburgh, the head of a large department store there, was quoted the other day as saying that the only way he could account for the activity in buying was that working people were spending the money they had saved out of the extra wages they had received while the war was on. He was a little uncertain, and a trifle apprehensive, as to what would happen when the savings came to an end. The place where he does business is one of those where industrial activity was most stimulated in providing military material, and where wages and bonuses were in proportion. With the sharp drop in production following the armistice, incomes had been reduced and the general outlook indicated the possibility of much unemployment. But the selling prices of all kinds of goods continued to mount, and the serious proposition that presents itself is as to when the buying must halt. Those who have made money in speculating on a rising market, and tillers of the soil whose crops have been bringing high prices, can keep up the buying longest. But there are lots of others whose incomes are really less than before the war because of the new forms of taxation who are finding it increasingly difficult to make both ends meet. They are already resorting to all kinds of makeshifts to avoid buying new things, and thrift with them is likely to become a passion as well as a necessity. It will not do, as some thoughtless business men are contemplating, to act as though the general public will submit to any kind of charge that may be attempted to be imposed on them.

Textile Profits in Canada.

In Canada an investigation is in progress to discover the reasons for the high cost of living, with the idea of adopting some measures to give relief to the consumer. In the matter of garments, for example, the fact was disclosed that the material for suits costing $35 and $70 was sold by the manufacturer for from $14 to $17. One textile company was shown to have made net earnings of 197.41 per cent. in five years. The head of the concern sought to justify its course by remarking:

Our mill was not built for the glory of God, but to make money for the shareholders, and some years we have been very successful in making it, but for as much as eight years at a time they had to take their dividends out in prayers.

Another textile company showed net earnings of 310 per cent. on its investment of capital amounting to $600,000, and accumulated besides a secret reserve of $1,000,000. The explanation given for secluding the last-mentioned amount was that, if the stockholders had known of it, they would have insisted on getting it in the form of dividends. The general manager of the company deemed it "best to conserve the money because, just as they had made it, they might lose it." Many well-informed persons are convinced that an inquiry here would reveal a state of affairs very similar to that which is being disclosed in Canada. But apparently the only inquiry afoot in this country is the one by the Ways and Means Committee at Washington, which is seeking for methods of tariff taxation whereby prices can be maintained at the highest of levels.

A turn for the worse in the crop prospects and the imminence of peace combined during the past week to shove up cotton quotations to a new record. Reports from the growing districts have been in the main rather pessimistic, and it is stated that the conditions outlined will be corroborated in the Government report which will be made public on Tuesday. So far as concerns the formal coming of peace, much has been made of the demand for cotton which is expected to come from Germany. There may be some disappointment in this, even if the financing of the exports can be arranged for. As a matter of fact, while Germany in normal times was credited with taking about 2,500,000 bales a year, much of this was re-exported to other countries, including even Great Britain. The German mills were given to using much of the shorter fibred but cheaper Indian cotton, and will doubtless continue the practice as soon as they can get the raw material. The cotton goods market has been fairly active with a large proportion of the sales from second hands who were taking profits on the new high levels of prices established. The mills themselves are rather cautious about commitments too far ahead, in view of the present inflation of values. Demand continues good for all kinds of cotton goods, and great hopes are based on an increase in the exports as soon as trading can be resumed with the Central Powers.

Supplies of Wool and Woolens.

It is a matter of some surprise that wool values should have been so well maintained, considering that the Government has been disposing of about 311,000,000 pounds at its various auction sales, and that the imports continue unabated while the domestic clip is larger than it has been for some years. But practically the same is true in Great Britain, although there has been there a somewhat more marked difference in the demand and price for the finer merinos than for the coarser wools. From now on the domestic wool will claim more attention from dealers, but it is understood that there will be offerings at auction by the Government of carpet wools which are not grown in this country. There have already been considerable dealings in the domestic clip which seems to command good prices. In the ten months ended with April, the latest for which official figures are given the imports of wool totaled 321,234,963 pounds, an increase of about 30,000,000 pounds over the corresponding period the year before. In that same ten months' period the imports of woolen fabrics were 1,975,230 square yards, a decrease of 1,330,180 square yards from the similar period in the preceding year. Exports of woolens have increased and so have those of woolen wearing apparel. The excess of exports over imports of woolen manufactures in the ten months ended with April was in value $12,204,926. The goods market was devoid of special features during the past week. Demand continues unabated for fabrics for both men's and women's wear with recurring complaints of slow deliveries. Efforts of buyers to secure contracts for Spring goods are regarded as premature as yet in most instances.

FEDERATION WORK OF TRAVELING MEN

This is a story of the National Council of Traveling Salesmen's Associations. To begin with, it is a federation which, at the present time, includes in its membership ten of the most prominent salesmen's organizations in the country. These associations are not only based on the kinds of merchandise sold by their members, but on the location of territories as well. They embrace the Far Western Travelers, the East and Middle Western Travelers, and the Southern Travelers Association. Additional member organizations include salesmen who sell laces, embroideries, and allied lines, silks, upholsteries and kindred merchandise, hats and boots and shoes. The Garment Salesmen's Association and the Associated Traveling Salesmen of New York also are member bodies.

At present the council has an approximate membership of 10,000, but it is headed toward becoming an organization in which the great bulk of the 600,000 commercial travelers of the United States will be included. It was born of the need of correcting a number of unpleasant features in the life of a traveling salesman, corrections that the individual associations, as such, could not give sufficient time to bring about.

One of the most important of these points was the question of the enfranchisement of thousands of "knights of the grip" who, because their calling took them from their home cities and towns at the time voters' registrations and elections were being held, were no more able to exercise their constitutional right to vote than if they were foreign born and not naturalized. Although that well-known event called the Revolutionary War was in part founded on the ground that taxation without representation is unjust, thousands of salesmen, especially in this State, occupy the position of the American colonists prior to 1776.

From time to time individual associations of salesmen, as well as individual salesmen, have made strenuous efforts to obtain the right to vote, but being voteless—and thereby harmless from the point of view of the professional politician—their endeavors met with failure. They were able to enlist the sympathy and aid of various legislators, but at a critical moment something always went wrong. Really co-operative work on the part of the organizations in the council, however, has brought about the passage in this State of the Martin bill permitting salesmen and other travelers to vote wherever they may be on Election Day. This measure is to be passed on by the voters of New York State next November, but executives of the council are bending every effort toward its acceptance, and are highly optimistic in regard to the chances of the salesman finally being admitted to what might be called full citizenship.

Questions of less interest than voting—but of vital importance to salesmen—out of which the federation idea grew, had to do with such things as railroad fares and excess baggage rates. Work of the council's representatives along this line, which was based on admittedly sound and thoroughly patriotic grounds, did not obtain the concessions from the Railroad Administration that had been hoped for, apparently because of the country's wartime need of all the revenue it could obtain. Enough was accomplished, however, to show the value of co-operation on the part of the road men, and it is possible that, as a result of it, the future may bring traveling concessions for salesmen which at the present time seem very far away. With a great proportion of the council's members working on a commission basis and paying their own expenses, it is easy to see how important is the work of its representatives in relation to railroads.

Other matters of importance to salesmen that need and get the attention of the "big men" of the council concern gouging on the part of certain transfer concerns, charges for hotel accommodations and sample rooms, and excessive tipping. All of these things affect the average salesman more now than they ever did before, for, as a result of the coupling of legitimate increases, due to the unsettled situation brought about by the war, and other increases not so legitimate, the cost of living for salesmen on the road has gone up almost with the speed of a shell from an aircraft gun. Just as Rome was not built in a day, so it will take time for the council to fight out these matters with the persons concerned, but the ultimate result is said not to be in doubt.

In addition to the foregoing, the council has several other irons in the fire. One of these is a movement that is expected to raise the standard of salesmanship to the level of a skilled profession. Another is the publication of a monthly organ under the name of The National Traveler. This will be devoted to vital questions of the day as they affect traveling men, a forum for individual association and council matters, financial news, and to other features of interest to the craft. It will make its first appearance about Aug. 1.

Along lines that combine business affairs with those of a social nature is the project of the council to erect in this city a $5,000,000 clubhouse for traveling men. The proposed building will be 12 stories in height, and according to Tim Healy, who is head of the council, options have been obtained on property for its erection in the neighborhood of Broadway and Forty-second Street. All the features of the big metropolitan clubs will be embodied in the proposed clubhouse, including hotel accommodations on the upper floors for either temporary or permanent occupation by members. The plans also provide for the operation of a bank in conjunction with the clubhouse.

Bonded Warehouse for Colon.

For a number of years there has been much discussion of the question of making Colon and Panama free ports or of establishing bonded warehouses in these cities. One of the largest rubber manufacturers in the United States has completed arrangements with the Panama Government, Consul Julius D. Dreher at Colon reports, for the building of the first bonded warehouse at Colon. By means of the warehouse the company will be able to store its products in Colon for reshipment to customers in Central and South America without having to pay the usual 15 per cent. ad valorem duty on rubber articles, and there will be a considerable saving of time in filling orders for goods.

Control Yellow Pine Prices.

From Consul General Skinner, London, has come the following cable dispatch to the Department of Commerce: "The Controller of Timber Supplies gives notice that excessive prices are being asked for yellow pine, despite the announcement previously made that no reason exists why prices in force up to March 31 should be exceeded. He further announces that if excessive prices continue he will dispose of Government stocks direct to consumers at prices not higher than the late maximum prices and that no notice will be given should this action be found necessary."

British Import Embargoes Off.

General licenses have been issued for the importation into Great Britain of upper leather and of fiber flaxseed for sowing, according to a cable dispatch received by the Department of Commerce from Consul General Skinner, who is stationed in London. Mr. Skinner also says that certificates of origin and interest are no longer required for Belgian goods imported into the United Kingdom.

Silk Mill Is Purchased.

John C. Welwood, who sells the product of a total of about 1,200 ribbon looms, the largest ribbon production of any concern in the world, has purchased the silk mill property of Klots & Bregebzer, Allentown, Penn. He announced his intention yesterday of building a large four-story addition to the property, which will accommodate 100 to 150 additional looms.

STOPPING TRADE EVILS.

Move Against Unscrupulous Resident Buyers of Dresses.

The fight of the Associated Dress Industries of America against unscrupulous resident buyers in this market is bearing fruit, according to Executive Director David N. Mossessohn, and it is only a matter of time when this type of individual or firm will find the showrooms of the apparel manufacturers closed to him or them.

"A few days ago," said Mr. Mossessohn yesterday, "I had one of these resident buyers at the offices of the association and brought to his attention one of the most unjust practices that has ever come to my notice. Of course, he disclaimed responsibility for it and attributed it to one of his assistants. However, it was made very clear to this man that if the offense is repeated, or any other action taken similar to this one, an exposé will follow which will not be to the advantage of the resident buyer, and no expense will be spared to have light thrown on all the nefarious practices of men who resort to tricky ways and means in their dealings with manufacturers of dresses in this and other markets."

Mr. Mossessohn went on to say that the unscrupulous activities in the trade which were in evidence a few years ago, and have been in some quarters ever since, must be stopped. If resident buyers and others will not take a warning when it is given to them, he asserted, they will only have themselves to blame for the serious results which are sure to follow. "I am waiting to make an example of one man, and this may come any day now," Mr. Mossessohn concluded. "When it does it will cause a sensation in the apparel trade."

FEATURES OF NEW HATS.

Brocade and Velvet Ones with Ostrich and Other Trimming.

One of the newer manufacturers in the local millinery trade featuring hats costing from $4 up is making a splendid line of hats for mid-Summer and early Fall wear, according to the bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America. This manufacturer uses a pretty brocade to a good advantage. This is to be one of the big items for the coming season, the bulletin says, and is very effectively used with beaver strip, panne and velvet.

"For mid-Summer extremely pretty pastel velvets are to be had in a variety of models," it continues. "Turbans of velvet and faille are shown in some smart little shapes. One with the sides of the toque pulled out, giving a rather flat effect in front and back, changes the contour of the regulation turban. Another pretty little turquoise velvet turban has the material laid on in fine shirrings. Six black glycerined pom poms, arranged at equal distances around the band of the hat, furnish the trim.

"Quite a good deal of ostrich is used for the Fall lines. Full ostrich bands and six-inch tips are used on many of the dressy models. A saucer brim hat indented here and there on the brim is made of sand velvet and a satin brocaded fabric. At the side back high ostrich tips of a sand hue lend a smart finish."

RAW SILK MARKETS.

Price Advances Continue to be the Case in All of Them.

The raw silk market at Yokohama has advanced again under the influence of heavy buying both for American and European consumption. Domestic consumption also is heavy, and Sinshiu No. 1 is now being quoted on the basis of 2,250 yen per picul. A further advance is expected. Visible stock at Yokohama is estimated at about 4,000 bales, poorly assorted.

The Canton market is unchanged, according to reports received here by A. P. Villa & Brothers, Inc., and prices are steady at the recent advance. Owing to the discrepancy in prices between Canton and Japanese silks, however, it is expected that higher quotations are also near that market. Shanghai is very active for steam filatures and tsatlees, while tussahs are strong and firmly held.

In the Milan market prices for Italian silks are unchanged, and a few transactions have taken place for American account. In the local market a large volume of business has been transacted during the past week at steadily advancing prices. Manufacturers, who have evidently been able to obtain an advance on their merchandise, have been buying freely. It is very hard to find spot silks of any kind in this market at the present time.

WINDOW DISPLAY PRIZES.

To be Awarded as Part of the "Blouse Week" Demonstration.

Prizes are to be awarded by the United Waist League of America for the most attractive window displays shown during "National Blouse Week," which is set for Nov. 10 to 15. They will be awarded through a Board of Judges that will pass on photographs which will be submitted to the league by retailers in all parts of the country. Considerable interest has been aroused in the project among the leading window dressers, a number of whom have written to Executive Director M. Mossessohn setting forth their plans for displays.

In several instances, Mr. Mossessohn said yesterday, retail associations in different communities are working out plans for the success of blouse week. It was estimated by him that 50,000 retailers throughout the country and more than 1,000 manufacturers of waists will participate in the movement. Requests for details are being received daily at the offices of the league from retailers all over the country. A number of posters, pasters, window display cards, &c., having to do with the movement are now being prepared.

SALES OF GRAY GOODS.

Trading Was Active Yesterday, Especially in Printcloths.

A tidy volume of gray goods changed hands in this market yesterday despite the short business day. Printcloths especially were active, and higher prices were again established on several constructions. Seventeen cents was paid for July-September deliveries of 39½-inch 64-60s, and for similar deliveries 68-48s in that width brought 14¾ cents. Buyers also bought those shipments at 20 cents for 39-inch 68-72s and 22 cents for 39-inch 72-76s.

Fine-yarn goods and specialties, while firmly held as to price, appeared none too active. In the sheetings, however, business was done by second hands on 56-60s, four-yard goods, at 17¼ cents, which is a quarter of a cent under the best net price that the mills will quote on that construction. Sixteen cents was paid for 48-square four-yard sheetings, and 6.50s brought 13½ cents.

Open New Belfast Shipyards.

The opening of Harland & Wolff's new shipyard on the Musgrave Channel for the building of standard fabricated ships marks an important development of the shipping industry in the Belfast district, says a bulletin of the American Chamber of Commerce in London that has just been received here. This yard has six building berths and a frontage of 900 feet on the channel. The opening of this yard, together with the two operated by the firm on the Clyde, give them the greatest producing capacity of any shipbuilding firm in the United Kingdom. Measured in tonnage, although perhaps not in the number of vessels, the capacity of these yards for building fabricated ships is considered largest than any similar plant in the United States. The Belfast firm is now in a position to build the largest vessels in the world.

COTTON GROWING IN INDIA.

British Need of Increasing the Cultivation of It There.

The appointment of a permanent Central Cotton Committee in Bombay, to order that the present lack of co-operation and co-ordination in regard to the cotton group may be replaced by a continuous and active policy of improvement, is recommended in a report made by a committee appointed by the Government of India in September, 1917, to consider the extension and improvement of cotton cultivation in that country.

The assumption on which the committee has worked, says the American Chamber of Commerce in London, is that there is a genuine demand for long staple Indian cotton, and that the trade is worth while for the cotton dealer to grow it. The only tracts where long staple cotton can be produced at present are Madras and the Punjab, where American cotton is making rapid headway. The survey of American production and increasing consumption, and of the world shortage of cotton make it desirable, according to the committee, that the Lancashire cotton industry should cease to be so dependent upon the American supply.

Of the average annual Indian crop, amounting to 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 bales, Lancashire uses very little. For the five years ended 1917-1918, the average exports to the United Kingdom were only 315,000 bales, of which a large part was re-exported. It is estimated in the report that it will be ten years before India can grow any large commercial quantity of cottons longer than 1 1-16 inches, which will spin only No. 24 twist and No. 44 weft in the Lancashire mills. The main assistance which India can be to Lancashire at the present time and in the near future is in hosiery yarns, the conditions surrounding which in India are very favorable.

New Fur Sales Plan Perfected.

Under an arrangement just perfected, it will be possible for dealers who bought skins at the recent New York and St. Louis fur sales to offer them at the forthcoming monthly auction of the Metropolitan Fur Exchange without the need of bringing their entire purchases to the premises of the exchange. The new plan provides for the selling of these furs by means of "show bundles" cleared from the sales of the largest concerns. Should the sample bundles be found not truly to represent the quality of the furs offered, the matter, under the terms of the sale, will be submitted to arbitration. As both the New York and St. Louis sales companies are noted for the fairness and accuracy of their "show bundles," it is said to be likely that little cause for complaint will be found. It is planned to speed up the selling at the coming auction, which begins on July 14, in order to dispose of in two days what ordinarily would take four days to sell.

Trade Chances in Sweden.

Insistence upon payment f. o. b. American port or at interior city of shipment on the part of American manufacturers and merchants promises to curtail seriously the sale of American products in Sweden and the rest of Scandinavia, for which at present there is a great demand. Many of the Scandinavian firms, explains Consul General Albert Halstead at Stockholm, have money tied up in goods that have not been delivered on account of the war, and more lenient terms would do a good deal toward establishing the American manufacturer in these markets.

Franco-British Textile Compact.

A commercial arrangement between France and Great Britain provides that the latter shall furnish France with 70,000 bales of Australian wool a month, together with shipping for transport, from June to December. In return France will grant import licenses for 2,000 tons of British woolen fabrics contracted for before the armistice. Of this amount fabric weighing under 300 grams shall not exceed 25 per cent. of the total.

FURNITURE FOR COTTAGES.

Special Designs for New British Model Workmen's Homes.

An exhibition prepared by the Shoreditch Technical Institute of London marks the first attempt to manufacture furniture for workmen's cottages and will, it is believed, have considerable influence on the British furniture trade.

These special designs, reports Trade Commissioner H. G. Brock from London, were prompted by the recent contest held by The London Daily Mail for model dwellings, for which architects were offered prizes totaling $30,000. This contest was part of the consideration given to various housing schemes in connection with the problem of reconstruction in the United Kingdom.

Accompanying the desire for new model homes, a demand arose for furniture especially suitable for them, the construction of which would be the simplest, combined with the required rigidity and strength. The furniture in the exhibit was designed to fit a small five-room model flat.

Spain Allows Olive Oil Exports.

The Spanish Government, according to a cablegram from Trade Commissioner Magruder at Madrid, will allow the exportation of 45,000,000 kilos of olive oil during the second half of this year.

INGENIOUS TESTS OF HORSE SENSE

A Few of the Questions the Psychologists Ask to Find Your Mental Index.

NO BOOK LEARNING NEEDED

Alertness and Adaptability of Mind and Plain Gumption the Requisites to Pass Them

By LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG

There is a woman, prominent in the publiceye in this country, who is a typical representative of a great many wrongly called "brilliant" persons. She has read more books perhaps than Lloyd George, Wilson, Lodge, Edison, Wilbur Wright, and Marconi, combined. Yet she is unintelligent in the large sense of that word. Her judgment is wrong on almost every important question. Her wishes, emotions, fancies, likes and dislikes influence her to the exclusion of her reason.

She considers quotations as valuable as original researches. She cannot distinguish a difference between a belief, a hope, an unfounded opinion, a theory, or a truth, tested by physical things.

To try hereafter to show anybody who wishes to know the difference between a well-read fool and an intelligent person, who may or may not be book-learned, Professor E. L. Thorndike of Columbia University and Dr. Wilmer of the University of Pennsylvania have brought out a set of tests to be used upon men and women before they reach 20 years of age.

Problems are given not of "have you read" Aristotle, Galen, Voltaire, Shakespeare, Hugo, Daudet, Emerson, or the less sort, but those which involve some difficulty from which the person tested must extricate himself. Objections, difficulties, and obstacles are set in the way to be overcome. Matters are presented for judgment, originality, inventiveness, creativeness, exploration, trials, rejections, and acceptance.

From the way these are met the experimental psychologist estimates the intelligence of the subject. It often happens that writers, reporters, authors, novelists, congressmen, teachers, physicians, and others saturated with book-learning, have very poor marks in comparison with inventors, discoverers, investigators, research workers, architects, "malefactors of great wealth," financiers, and dramatists.

A square piece of paper is folded once over in the middle; then again in the middle at right angles to the first. Then a pair of scissors is used to cut out a small notch from the side, which presents one edge. The fragment is thrown into the waste basket. The folded paper is left exposed to view, but pressed flat against the table. You are now given a pencil and a sheet of paper and told to take this piece of paper and make a drawing to show how the other sheet of paper would look if it were unfolded. You must draw lines to show the creases in the paper and the results of the cutting. You are not allowed to fold the sheet, but must solve the problem by the unaided imagination.

You pass the test if the creases in the paper are correctly reproduced. The shape of the holes is disregarded. If you pass, you have a constructive imagination. In his volume, "The Measure of Intelligence," by Professor Lewis M. Terman of Leland Stanford University, various practical tests are shown to prove a man's intelligence.

You see a box; it has two smaller boxes inside of it, and each one of the smaller boxes contains a little, tiny box. How many boxes are there altogether contained in the big one?

The answer, of course, is simple, but it requires a fair degree of intelligence to give the solution in half a minute, practically without hesitation.

Success in this problem seems to depend chiefly on the facility with which the constructive imagination manipulates concrete visual imagery. In this respect it resembles the problem of reversing the hands of the clock.

An alternative to "the fish in the bucket of water" test, which is this, is the following:

You know, of course, that water holds up a fish that is placed in it. Suppose we have a bucket that is partly full of water. We place the bucket on the scales and find that with the water in it it weighs exactly 45 pounds. Then we put a 5½-pound fish into the bucket of water. Now, what will the whole thing weigh?

Suppose a man is shooting at a mark about the size of a quart can. His rifle carries perfectly more than 100 yards. With such a gun is it harder to hit the mark at 100 yards than it is at fifty yards?

Simply to answer that it would be easier at fifty yards is not sufficient, nor can you accept the response which merely states that it is "easier to aim at fifty yards." The correct principle must be given, one which shows the subject has appreciated the fact that a small deviation from the bullseye at fifty yards, due to incorrect aim, becomes a larger deviation at 100 yards. However, the subject is not required to know that the deviation at 100 yards is exactly twice as great as at fifty yards.

Here are three other questions:

"A man who was walking in a woods near a city stopped suddenly, very much frightened, and then ran to the nearest policeman, saying he had just seen hanging from the limb of a tree a—a what?"

"My neighbor has been having queer visitors. First a doctor came to his house, then a lawyer, then a minister. What do you think happened there?"

"An Indian who had come to town for the first time in his life saw a white man riding along the street. As the white man rode by, the Indian said, 'The white man is lazy. He walks sitting down.' What was the white man riding on that caused the Indian to say, 'He walks sitting down'?"

The correct answer for the first question is, "A man who had hung himself," or who had committed suicide, been hanged, &c.

Unsatisfactory answers are "A snake," "A monkey," "A robber," "A tramp," "A bear," "A tiger, cat," "A bird," "An ox," "A ghost," "A white sheet," "Clothes."

To the second question the expected answer is a death, with an explanation that the doctor came to attend a sick person, the lawyer to make his will and the minister to preach at the funeral.

The following original responses, Professor Terman says, was given by a young eugenist, and is classed as excellent:

"A marriage; the doctor came to examine them and see if they were fit to marry; the lawyer to arrange the marriage, and the minister to marry them."

The commonest incorrect answers are: "A baby born" (accounting for five out of sixty-six failures); "Divorce," (very common with children tested at Reno, Nev.) "A marriage," "A divorce and remarriage."

To the third question the only answer is "Bicycle."

Some more questions are these:

What is the difference between—
Laziness and idleness?
Evolution and revolution?
Poverty and misery?
Character and reputation?

What lesson does this fable teach you?

A man was driving along a country road when the wheels suddenly sank in a deep rut. The man did nothing but look at the wagon and call loudly to Hercules to come and help him. Hercules came up, looked at the man, and said: "Put your shoulder to the wheel, my man, and whip up your oxen." Then he went away and left the driver, An ingenuity test. Can you do this?

A mother sent her boy to the river and told him to bring back exactly seven pints of water. She gave him a three-pint vessel and a five-pint vessel. Show me how the boy can measure out exactly seven pints of water, using nothing but these two vessels and not guessing at the amount. You should begin by filling the five-pint vessel first. Remember, you have a three-pint vessel and a five-pint vessel, and you must bring back exactly seven pints.

In this test you are not allowed pencil or paper and it must be done in five minutes' time.

Repeat these six digits backwards:

5	8	3	2	9	4
7	5	2	6	3	8

Anybody can repeat any six of these digits the way they are printed; can you take a hard look at them, or have them read to you, and repeat them reversed?

Repeat these sentences exactly:

Walter likes very much to go on visits to his grandmother, because she always tells him many funny stories.

Yesterday I saw a pretty little dog in the street. It had a curly brown hair, short legs, and a long tail.

Whatever else may be said about these tests, it is clear they do not presuppose wide reading in philosophy, poetry, history, art, and other literature. The theory is that they give an index of gumption and mental alertness, as the psychologists think they really do supply such an index.

The black satin gown pictured at the right has circular medallions of black silk braid strategically placed. And the material is artfully draped to allow freedom of movement without lessening the restraint of the line.

Truth to Tell

"Copy" for Bloomingdale advertising is edited, re-edited, revised and censored by the merchandise and comparison offices, and even then frequently returned to the buyer for additional information.

Not that a department executive would attempt to mislead you. They are our staunchest supporters in the policy of truth-telling. But the advertising office is more exacting with them than are our customers.

So be it. We shall continue to demand more for you than you demand for yourselves. Then you are certain to be satisfied—always.

PEACE.

The formal act of signing the Treaty in the Hall of Mirrors at Versailles yesterday calls for no renewal of those outbursts of emotional rejoicing which marked the signing of the armistice last November. Whatever the formalists may say, all men have felt that the war ended then. The Treaty but attests a fact long ago established and fixes the terms of settlement.

It is one of the greatest events in history, it makes powerful appeal to the imagination. The coincidences are interesting. Five years to a day from the date of the assassination of Crown Prince FERDINAND, which furnished Germany with the pretext for a war long planned, an instrument is executed that shatters the whole fabric of German military autocracy. In the same hall where forty-eight years ago a WILLIAM HOHENZOLLERN crowned himself German Emperor, two men of humble station, representing a Germany transformed into a socialist republic, sign a treaty acknowledging Germany's responsibility for the war and agreeing to the surrender for trial and punishment of the grandson and Imperial successor of that HOHENZOLLERN, now a fugitive, a pitiful figure of a man cowering in dread of justice.

But the long months of negotiation have dulled the zest for such reflections, which belong within the domain of sentiment. It is to practical tasks that men flow turn, and they are gigantic. We have remade the world in the political sense, we have still to rebuild it in the sense of restoring so much that has been destroyed, so much that is indispensable to the prosperity of nations and to the happiness of men. The best counsel that the wisest of statesmen can now give to the peoples of all lands is to turn their eyes and thoughts to the future. For the sorrows of the past work is the greatest solace, and it is by work alone that the world can be restored. Work, nothing but work will build up the waste places, feed the hungry, and relieve the needy.

The service to which men are now summoned is comparable in its worth and nobility to the great service rendered by the soldiers in the field. It calls upon them to pledge all their resources of brain and hand to the task of repairing the wastes of war, of bringing the world again into the enjoyment of abundance and prosperity.

NEW YORK THE ROMANTIC.

The first impression of New York is that it is "so romantic." Thus at least spoke a gentlewoman who lately returned to it after an absence of several years. As the years had been spent in France, well within the range of Big Bertha and Gotha bombs, and amid the turmoil of the armies of half the world, the word arrested attention. Was this another instance of that new sort of esprit d'escalier with which visitors have learned to placate home-keeping Americans as they are met at the steamer? Or did it really mean something?

In politics and finance we are already aware of certain cubits added of late to our international stature. But if New York makes an appeal to the imagination, after the manner of Paris and London, that is news, at least to indigenous New Yorkers. If true, it is important news—and not a little disquieting.

Some day, though, we may rejoice in it. Time was when we were sadly selfconscious about the architecture of our city. We said that our impious buildings actually scraped the sky. Then JOSEPH PENNELL came back and drew them as they are. Few visions of this globe are now more splendid to us that lower Manhattan as seen from the Narrows, bathed in sunset. The skyline of the city at twilight as seen from across the North River, or the reflected flushes of dawn as seen from Brooklyn Bridge, stir the senses very deeply, and the imaginations, of those who see with their eyes. And the stars are never more brilliant, more remote and awe-inspiring, than when one looks up from between two buildings such as the prosaically blind call skyscrapers.

And now it appears that all this is not only picturesque but filled with the spirit of high adventure. Really, we should have known it. That is the feeling that has shone in the eyes of all the returning soldiers who have seen New York for the first time on landing from a transport. In retrospect, at least, that seems to have been the feeling in those young eyes. And we, the local denizens whom they saw, were all captains of industry, grown old and weary, who stood in need of a brisk young man from the West to put our gigantic business right. Yes, to the traveler from the land of Saturday Night, as to the traveler from the war zone, our city and ourselves are romantic. The sooner we are reconciled to the fact the better citizens we shall be, and indeed the more justifiably proud.

THEIR ONLY WAY OUT.

Mr. ROOT was called into consultation by the Republican Senators to help them out of the dangerous situation into which they had blundered through their hostility to Mr. WILSON and the League of Nations. With all his skill, wisdom, and experience, he has helped them not at all. The reservations he recommends are amendments, and amendments will kill the Treaty, so far as the United States is concerned. The American Commissioners at Paris by dispatch to Washington have requested that the complete text of Mr. ROOT's letter to Senator LODGE be cabled to them. They wish to ascertain whether his proposals are actual amendments of the Treaty or are merely reservations, which, if assented to, would express only the Senate's understanding and interpretation of certain provisions. Upon the briefest examination of the text, the Council must and will reach the conclusion that the reservations are in fact amendments of the Treaty. It is perfectly well known to Mr. ROOT and to the Senators that, as Mr. HENRY W. TAFT has recently pointed out in a communication to THE TIMES, "if Section 1 of the Treaty with "Germany, being the covenant of the "League, is amended by the Senate, "neither the Treaty as a whole nor any "of its provisions can become effective "either to restore peace or for any other "purpose until it has been ratified in "its amended form by all of the signa-"tory nations."

Mr. ROOT's first proposal is that, in consenting to the Treaty, the instrument of ratification shall contain this reservation:

> In advising and consenting to the ratification of the said Treaty, the Senate reserves and excludes from its consent the tenth article of the covenant for the League of Nations, as to which the Senate refuses its consent.

Mr. ROOT's second proposal is that in consenting to ratification, with the exception of Article X. of the covenant, the Senate shall modify and amend the provision concerning withdrawal of membership in the League. These are amendments of the Treaty, they are avowedly such, they are material changes. Their inclusion in the instrument of ratification would leave the United States still at war with Germany until the other nations signing the Treaty had accepted them. Inasmuch as the Senate's refusal of consent to Article X. would pluck out the very heart of the League covenant, nullifying the substantive provision which embodies one of its highest and most beneficent purposes, we may be very sure that the other signatory Powers would not accept that amendment, the Treaty would be void of all effect upon the relations between the United States and Germany. Mr. ROOT's amendments are fatal, their adoption by the Senate would be equivalent to a flat refusal to ratify.

The third proposal of Mr. ROOT is of a different nature. He would have the Senate declare that it interprets the amended provision relating to the Monroe Doctrine as implying no "relinquishment "by the United States of America of its "traditional attitude toward purely "American questions," and that in assenting to the Treaty it would not consent to the submission of its policies regarding purely American questions to the decisions or recommendations of other Powers. Since this is a true interpretation of the covenant, it does not constitute an amendment, and we have the authority of well-known precedents for the conclusion that such a statement by the Senate would not impair the completeness of the act of ratification, would call for no action by the other Powers.

We may assume that the Republican Senators will presently be confronted by a declaration from Paris that the inclusion of Mr. ROOT's recommendations in the ratification of the Treaty will of necessity be construed as a refusal to ratify. The state of war between the United States and Germany will continue. Senator FALL's proposal of a joint resolution of Congress declaring the war at an end provides no way of escape for the obstructionists. War cannot be ended in that fashion. It is declared in Section 24 of the Food Control Act, "That the provisions of this "Act shall cease to be in effect when the "existing state of war between the "United States and Germany shall have "terminated, and the fact and date of "such termination shall be ascertained "and proclaimed by the President." In Chapter 106 of the Trading with the Enemy Act it is declared that "the "words 'end of the war' as used herein "shall be deemed to mean the date of "proclamation of exchange of ratifica-"tions of the treaty of peace, unless the "President shall, by proclamation, de-"clare a prior date, in which case the "date so proclaimed shall be deemed to "be the 'end of the war' within the "meaning of this Act." It is thus evident from the statutes that any person entering into trade relations with Germans under the illusory protection of Senator FALL's joint resolution might expose himself to the penalties of fine and imprisonment. There are many such acts conferring broad powers upon the Government and limiting individual rights, involving continued large expenditure. It cannot reasonably be supposed that the President would approve a measure that would have the effect, clearly intended, of brutally sundering the good relations that have been built up between the United States and the Powers with which it has been associated in the war. Action upon the Fall resolution has been "postponed"; it must necessarily go the way of the Knox resolution.

The Republican Senators, as we have said, are in a dangerous situation. The country, the great mass of their own party, demand the ratification of the Treaty, they are dallying with the proposal to kill the Treaty by amendment. The country demands the establishment of the League of Nations, yet in their implacable hostility to Mr. WILSON and all his works they have resolved to destroy the covenant, which all the nations demand as a safeguard against war, as a promise that they shall be secure in the enjoyment of peace. From one position to another these willful Senators have been driven because they realize that what they were attempting to do involved the destruction of their party and of themselves. Mr. ROOT has not helped them out of their predicament. There is but one way out of the dangers that beset them, it is the way of ratification, and that way they must and will be forced to take.

COMMERCE OR FINANCE?

Never was the world in greater need than now of both buying and selling all that makes life livable. But instead of stimulating both buying and selling the nations of the world are playing at cross-purposes. The necessitous buyers are preventing the supply of what they want, if they are in good credit, because they do not see their way to paying the bills. Thus France and England are blocking imports by Government restrictions. There are a dozen nations for which the world is responsible as parents for children who would buy regardless of payment, not because they are without honor, but because otherwise they perish, physically and politically. On the other hand, the nation which is in best condition to supply these wants is embarrassing itself in the performance of its duty with profit. Our necessity to sell our surplus is so great that there is a protest against the precautions taken for paying us for what we sell. England and France should buy, the argument runs, and yet there are barriers proposed against their selling here. It is lamented that we are the selling market of the world, and it is proposed to erect tariffs against our increasing imports. There is grief that our gold is slipping away to pay for what we have bought, although the result is such increase of the credit and buying power of those who receive it that they will buy multifold the value of the gold we spare so easily and so reluctantly. How shall this bundle of contradictions be reconciled—by commerce or by finance?

Straws show which way the wind blows, and there are curious straws fluttering in the trade winds. A day or two ago there was gold afloat in opposite directions, going and coming at the same time. Also, we were at the same time selling steel rails dear in Glasgow and buying gems cheap in the London auctions. And a humble Bulgarian landed here with hand baggage containing $75,000 worth of attar of roses. An equal weight of gold would have had only a fraction of the value, and an equal value of gold could not have been conveniently transported as personal baggage. These are not merely curiosities of commerce. They are trickles through the dam against trade which is breaking the deadlock between buyers and sellers on a greater scale, and which soon will gain volume. The world confronts the condition, rather than the theory, that all that a man hath will he give to satisfy his hunger, and that those who must sell food or be ruined by their undigestible excess will find a way to their market. Simultaneously with the above examples of trade finding or making a way for itself the American Relief Association reported that it had arranged the sale of sugar, salt, oil, and other sundries to the Jugoslavs, who are among the most active buyers in those regions. Czechoslovakia is exchanging coal for German Austria's coal mining implements. Austria is bankrupt, but is exchanging matches for figs and corn in Croatia. The list of bargains is too long to give in full, but there can be no doubt that those who are too poor to trade with the rich and cautious are finding a way to trade with one another.

To bring the moral a little closer to ourselves, consider Poland. Its textile industry employs 250,000 men, who have been idle and hungry for months, inviting prey for diseases of body and mind. They cannot weave cotton cloth without fibre, and our relief association has supplied 25,000 bales of cotton. That still is a trifle, but Poland is asking for a credit of $40,000,000 for cotton. With that amount of cotton the Polish city and country can supply each other's needs, the cities clothing the farmers and the farmers feeding the cloth makers. Otherwise both may go Bolshevist, and we may keep our cotton to our loss. If we clothe the world, it may be expected that our own clothes will be dearer. If we do not clothe those who are naked, and do not feed the hungry, there will be clothes and food for ourselves so much cheaper that we may realize our mistake too late. We are maintaining our domestic trade, but we are slowing down our foreign trade, or rather the foreign trade which might be ours now for the doing, but which already is slipping away. For example, there is a foreign demand for scores of millions of tons of coal, and our mines are working half time or thereabouts. It is a reproach that we compel foreign buyers to overbid our domestic consumers for iron and steel, allowing our domestic wants to go undersupplied while our mills are on 60 or 70 per cent. capacity. The occasion demands courage and growth. We are rising to the occasion with caution and contraction.

There is a time for those virtues, but not now. The present is a commercial crisis, which should be met in the temper by which financial crises are conquered. If the need of the instant were for credits the bankers would know how to meet it, and they are proposing all sorts of banking devices, as though credits were a substitute for goods and services. Finance is only a tool of commerce, and the suppliers of wants are acting as though there were a deficiency of credit instead of an excess of demand over supply of necessities. When a banker confronts such a crisis the request of a customer for a million of credit is met with a loan of two millions, the surplus over the request swelling the banker's deposits and binding the needy borrower to his banker against another time of need.

Our purveyors and traders abroad should sell as boldly as bankers lend. They can do so in certainty that no seller of goods need lack for credit, even though speculators find the banks closed to them. The way to meet the world wants is to overwhelm them with abundance. Foreign buyers should be supplied and foreign borrowers referred to their own banks. It is not well to trust too much money abroad, for it may be spent in detriment to our trade. The need is for goods and services in multiples of billions as nearly without limit as it ever can be. It will not long be so. Our friendly competitors and our enemies in particular know how to trust buyers with character. Our bankers are ready. Our traders are laggards.

PROHIBITION.

The prohibitionists have been skillful. The more extreme of them no doubt regret that the prohibition enforcement bills did not include provisions for indiscriminate search of private houses and the persons of citizens, such as have lately been brought to the public attention in Virginia; but the wiser realized that this would certainly lead to widespread violence and would dispose many citizens, otherwise indifferent, to a reaction against the whole policy. And the enforcement bill for constitutional prohibition, as distinguished from the milder measure dealing with the ironically named "wartime prohibition," seems likely really to enforce it.

There are some temporary and inadequate palliatives for those who are unable to resign themselves to the inevitable; the bills are not likely to become law till some days after July 1, so for a few days bold men who are not afraid of the mere prohibition may still traffic in the forbidden staples. The provisions for enforcing wartime prohibition forbid the sale, manufacture, and barter of liquor, but not transport and export, and some rather forlorn optimists have suggested that it ought to be possible to get a bottle if you say you want to ship it to a friend in Canada. Soon even that will be impossible; the enforcement bill for constitutional prohibition forbids the manufacture, sale, barter, transport, import, export, delivery, furnishing, receipt, or possession of liquor. The inhibition of giving it away has troubled many; is it legal to serve part of your cherished stock to your dinner guests? Must a man whose friend likes to join him in a social glass deed half his supply to him before July 1? But the hard-won concession which legalizes possession of liquor in the home and forbids searching of residences is likely to remove the practical possibility of prosecution for such an offense.

The bill to enforce the constitutional amendment seems sufficiently drastic actually to enforce it if anything can. The provisions against "bootlegging," the drug store trade, and the misuse of patent medicines are designed to prevent recourse to expedients that would be far worse than the evils of the saloon; and as the act now stands none of its clauses seems unreasonably harsh except perhaps the inhibition against drinking "in or upon any car, train, automobile, boat, or other public conveyance." This might have dire consequences for passengers bitten by a rattlesnake on a transcontinental express; but extreme prohibitionists mindful of ancient expedients will doubtless insist on an additional clause providing that all snakes be numbered and licensed, and that permits to maintain them may be revocable for misuse.

Altogether, it appears that for everybody but those rich enough to lay in unlimited supplies this country will go pretty nearly dry tomorrow at midnight. And this is not altogether undesirable; if we are going to have prohibition, we might as well have it and see how we like it. Even in this country of intemperate legislation it marks a step in advance of anything hitherto known; the natural popular feeling against the evils of the saloon has been perverted, at a time when a large proportion of the young men of the country were abroad, into a measure which practically abolishes our Federal system, and which ignores public sentiment as much as constitutional tradition. The North has felt a natural resentment in that the amendment was enacted in large part by Southern States, which have the best of reasons for clinging to as large a measure of States' rights as they can retain; New York has no interest in prohibiting the dipping of snuff or the limitation of the vote to white men, and may have hoped that her sister Commonwealths might be equally tolerant. But they have not seen it so, and prohibition is in the Constitution; the winds have not been tempered for such black sheep as hoped that it might have been intended only in a Pickwickian sense.

One alleviation only can be contemplated by the moderately minded. Congress declares in the enforcement bill that intoxicating liquor is any potable containing more than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol by volume. The prohibitionists no doubt already realize their mistake in not having this clause put into the amendment; for as it stands a future Congress can amend the act by defining intoxicating liquor as anything containing not more than some much higher proportion of alcohol, and thereby remove the lid from our at present hermetically sealed Republic. But that is a long way off, if it ever comes. Tomorrow night is the end of an epoch.

And it may be imagined that the scenes of that night will furnish ammunition for the enemies of alcohol for many years to come. It has been observed in recent weeks that men who never drank have begun to drink, that moderate drinkers have become more or less immoderate. To a prohibitionist this proves merely the moral turpitude of the individual, and it will be impossible to convince him that the excesses which are likely to be seen tomorrow night are due at all to the unwise inhibition of all drinking forever after. The scene will go down in history as depicted by those unsympathetic with it, for everybody who is sympathetic will be too much upset to present a coherent narrative.

THE VISIT OF R-34.

The British dirigible R-34, which is due on the Atlantic seaboard the middle of this week, unless the time of sailing should be changed again, bears a general resemblance to the model which RUFUS PORTER, the Yankee inventor, patented a century ago lacking a year. PORTER'S hull was cigar-shaped, with the car, to contain a steam engine, swung below; between the car and the inflated bag a large screw propeller was to revolve. There was to be space in the car for a crew of several men. A print of the time shows that the dirigible of 1820 (Presidency of JAMES MONROE) had a tail like a fish, and where the tail joined the body or hull the Stars and Stripes were flying. A steam exhaust in the shape of a long pipe projects from the car in which the engine is housed. Report says that at a trial the airship "carried its own power "at fair speed, and obeyed its helm satis-"factorily." The inventor organized a stock company to raise $1,500, with which he expected to build what he called an "aeroport" to carry five persons at sixty miles an hour. It was to be finished and ready to navigate the air in six weeks. PORTER was a very practical man, although his neighbors called him a dreamer and crank, refusing to take stock in his company. Those were the days of cheap material and low labor prices. Even so, PORTER couldn't get together $1,500 to build his jitney airship. But if he was in advance of his age he has remained in touch in a way with the era of aeronautic achievement, for he was founder of the Scientific American, which in our generation tells the story from week to week of the triumph that was denied RUFUS PORTER.

After man first took to the air he was a long time producing a ship that could be navigated through the sky and go where he listed. As in the case of the airplane, the steam engine could not be fitted effectively to the lighter-than-air ship, the balloon. When the gas or petrol engine came in, attainment was at hand. Today we make heroes of our aviators, but are they as brave as were PILATRE DE ROZIER and the Marquis D'ARLANDES, who went up with MONTGOLFIER'S flimsy bag filled with hot air from a straw fire on Nov. 21, 1783, at Paris? But it should be said that the original aeronauts were a sheep, a rooster, and a duck, which in the presence of the King and Queen of France at Versailles, and to the applause of a great multitude, soared into the air to a height of 1,400 feet, had a ride of two miles, and landed in the wood of Vaucresson, where the sheep was found grazing and the rooster heard to crow lustily. The animals having survived the voyage of the aerial ark, man ascended. In about six weeks after the adventure of the sheep and his shipmates Professor CHARLES and JOSEPH MONTGOLFIER were two hours in the air and drifted thirty miles, the balloon they used being filled with hydrogen. A little more than a year later the English Channel was crossed by the Frenchman BLANCHARD and Dr. JEFFRIES, an American and a Harvard graduate. About this time the pioneer PILATRE DE ROZIER met his death in the fall of a flaming balloon that had left Boulogne for England.

Ballooning in the early part of the nineteenth century had become a sport, and men were vainly trying to invent a means of steering the great bags, as a sailing boat might be controlled. There were long distance drifts as time went on. The Great Balloon of Nassau, with ROBERT HOLLAND, CHARLES GREEN, and MONCK MASON on board, started from London "for anywhere" on Nov. 7, 1836, and reached Weilburg, in the Duchy of Nassau, after a voyage of 500 miles in eighteen hours. At the Paris Exposition in 1878 HENRI GIFFARD'S balloon, the largest "passive balloon" every constructed—450,000 cubic feet—took up forty passengers at a time. Ballooning had become about as safe as sitting in a church. Two notable "drifts" in recent years were that of DE LA VAULX (1900) from Vincennes to Korostichetf, Russia, 1,193 miles in thirty-five hours, and the experience of A. R. HAWLEY and AUGUSTUS POST in the spherical balloon America, who started from St. Louis on Oct. 17, 1910, and finished in the wilderness at Peribonka River, Canada, 1,172 miles away, where they were lost for several days. The bold adventure of WALTER WELLMAN, who planned to cross the Atlantic in a "motor balloon," began in the same year, on Oct. 15, Atlantic City being the port of departure. He sailed to a point 140 miles northeast of Nantucket, where an unfavorable wind took charge and carried him toward Bermuda. Rescued by a welcome steamship, WELLMAN traveled about 1,000 miles in all. His was a failure not without merit.

High on the roll of daring inventors who planned dirigible balloons stands the name of HENRI GIFFARD. His steam dirigible of 1852 could not make headway in the teeth of a wind, but she responded to the rudder satisfactorily in her tests. Afterward he designed a ship 2,000 feet in length with a capacity of 7,000,000 cubic feet, to be driven by a two-boiler steam engine; but, losing his eyesight, the distinguished French engineer was a prey to despair and committed suicide with chloroform. The early years of the twentieth century saw a rapid development of the dirigible balloon; in France the LEBAUDY brothers, Colonel RENARD, LOUIS GODARD, and the Astra Society, and in Germany Major VON PARSEVAL and Count FERDINAND VON ZEPPELIN designed and built great craft that swept through the air with much the same facility as ships in Neptune's realm traverse the sea. The various Zeppelins, known by their numbers, won the Count the title of King of the Air, but, as has been said, "his rivals have taken his pattern and "improved upon it until soon airships "will be able to keep afloat for many "days and to cross oceans."

The largest and most serviceable airship in the world today is the British R-34, which the American people will soon have an opportunity of seeing. Built at a cost of $1,250,000, she is 670 feet in length, with a capacity of 2,200,000 cubic feet. Equipped with five motors, her speed is sixty-seven miles an hour. For the transatlantic flight she will carry a crew of twenty-three men. A soldier, Major G. H. SCOTT of the Royal Air Force, will command her. With favorable weather conditions R-34 should have no difficulty in crossing the Atlantic in fifty hours.

THE BRITISHER IN AMERICA.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

General Maurice says that "to the majority of Americans the Britisher is a foreigner."

Ex-Governor Charles S. Whitman of New York recently said, "The ideals of America and Britain are one."

Governor Theo. G. Bilbo of Mississippi, since the signing of the armistice, has declared, "the English are our own kith and kin. To this race we owe our admirable system of jurisprudence and inherit from it our love of individual and religious liberty."

In a resolution accepted and approved by Governor Julius C. Gunter of Colorado and Mayor W. F. R. Mills of Denver, paying tribute to the gigantic part played by Great Britain and the empire in the world war, the people of Colorado declared themselves "brothers in heart and brothers in mind, as we are brothers in blood, with the brave sons of Britain and the younger Britannic nations."

"The British," declared Mayor Hanson of Seattle on Britain's Day, Dec. 7: 1918, "are our brothers, our comrades, our people."

A SYMBOLIC PAGEANT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Many things have been written anent the sinking of the ships at Scapa Flow by the Germans, but this is the way, or one way, in which it appears to me.

Of course, this is the era of pageants. Almost every city gives pageants. They are naturally about the prosperity and progress of the nation, but it has remained for the Germans, the unique Germans, to give a pageant which is a parable easy to be read by him who runs. Under the imperial flag the German fleet was bottled up. When the Allies commanded it sailed out. When the imperial standard was again raised the fleet sank. What more perfect parable of the degradation and utter destruction of Germany! But what other country would have declared it to the world?

THE LEAGUE OPPOSITION.

Republican Senators Endangering Their Leadership.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The presentation contained in the leading editorial article in this morning's TIMES ought surely to awaken to a sense of duty to their country and to the civilized world those United States Senators who are opposing the proposed League of Nations for a worldwide establishment of peace for which our President has been worthily laboring in the name of humanity. If their opposition is persisted in, the regard in which they have heretofore been held by their Republican contemporaries will be deservedly forfeited, their leadership repudiated, and their names dishonored.

Let them take heed in season.

JOHN N. ABBOTT.

New York, June 26, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am a veteran of the civil war, and for all my life have been a Republican, because I believed it to be the party of right principles, honesty and manhood, but I get so disgusted and out of patience with the narrow-minded bigotry, insincerity, and general peanut conduct of some of our self-styled Republican leaders in the Senate—and particularly the "me too" one from this State—that I sometimes wonder if these men now really represent the same party I have been in active sympathy with all my life? I doubt it, but if they do the parting of the ways has come for me. T. RETLAW.

Brooklyn, June 19, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial article in this morning's TIMES on the action of certain Senators in Washington trying to nullify the earnest and great effort of our President in perfecting a League of Nations for the prevention of future wars was most gratifying to me.

If some representatives at Washington put party interests ahead of the interests of the country, then it is high time for the people to demand that such representatives reverse themselves promptly or resign at once.

I would suggest that the papers throughout the country take a vote of the people whether or not any action should be taken at Washington regarding the League of Nations until after the President has been fully heard and the purposes and plans of the League are fully understood by the people throughout the country. AN AMERICAN.

UNREPENTANT GERMANY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The scuttling of the German fleet at Scapa Flow is a renewal of the high treachery of which Germany has already shown herself a master. This is followed by the burning of the French flags of 1870—another German method of preserving German honor. When are these things going to cease? We thought the war had taught them a lesson. It evidently has taught them nothing. They learn only slowly. When are the Allies going to teach them?

The sad truth is, Germany is unconquered. She is bold, defiant, treacherous. She must be taught. If it is not done at once, she will "break out" again.

Germany is in plenty, not poverty. Her fields and cities are intact. Not far from the western front she is tilling the soil and living happily. The Germans can pay, and the future security of the world demands that they be made to pay. K. K. Q.

Irvington, N. J., June 24, 1919.

'TIS SIGNED!

"Sign!"
He cringes at the word!
He who, plying free the sword
Where fiercely swirled
Flames of his making, shook a world!
He cringes!
"Sign!"

And now he mocks them with his maudlin tears,
And cries aloud, "I cannot, cannot pay!
Give back my pomp and strength of better years,
My air toys, too. My cannon, where are they?
See how my children cling to me.
(Alsace, Alsace, stay—I am here!)
See how they love me tenderly!
(Lorraine, why do you leave me, dear?)
I want my lands, my rights, my life!
I, too, am human——!"

In the darkened room a solemn hum
Is heard; somewhere a muffled drum,
Then silence! Once again the sound,
Unearthly, weird, comes from the ground
And rends the Conference Halls!
Far off a hollow leader calls;
Come hollow cries within the walls;
The hollow rush of soldiers falls
Upon the straining ear.
The whirlwind, coming near and near,
Engulfs the petty, huxter crowd
In whirlwind speed and whirlwind cloud
Of deafening sound! "Sign! Sign!" it shrieks,
"And bargain not! 'Tis ravished Belgium speaks!"
"Sign! Sign!" a thunderous voice rings clear,
"This is no trade that passes here!
'Tis Retribution just! We bled
That this may be! I speak for France's dead!"
"Sign!" cry the wraiths! The echo falls
From battlements and Conference walls.
"Sign! Sign!" The din comes piercing shrill.
The clash of arms,
Martial alarms,
And tumults wild the chamber fill.

"Sign!" sternly speaks Humanity,
"Sign now the deed! Tempt not the free!
They lenient are with thee!"
And clamor rises near and far;
Come cries of Peace, comes din of War;
Comes high above the unearthly roar,
Deafening, insistent more and more,
"Sign! Sign the deed and bargain not!
Are thus our lives so soon forgot?"
The ominous rattle of the sword
Lends steely sharpness to the word.
Slow, hesitant, the plume is sought,
The hated drop in fear is caught,
The shackled brute looks vacant 'round,
While ever the insistent sound
Rises tumultuous from the ground,
Then bends his head.

The noises cease,
The scratch of pen in silence deep
Is heard. The pen away is flung!
Triumphant now the echoes leap
From wall to wall, the sobs among;
"'Tis signed! 'Tis signed! Our Peace is signed!
We have not died in vain! 'Tis signed!"

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR ON SUBJECTS OF PUBLIC INTEREST

STATE INCOME TAX

New York's Right to Impose Different Burdens on Residents and Non-Residents

New York, June 25, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The constitutionality of the New York income Tax law has been drawn in question by Mr. Henry M. Powell in a statement and a letter given by him to the newspapers. The statements made by him seem to me to call for some correction.

So far as the supposed violation of the home rule provision of the Constitution of the State of New York is concerned, I am inclined to agree with Mr. Powell that the courts will hesitate before nullifying the new law and setting aside millions of dollars of income tax assessments because in the year 1778 there was on the statute books a law requiring local assessors to assess incomes. I may add that the law of 1778 was not a general income tax, but was only a tax on business incomes which might be regarded as in the nature of a business excise, and that I know of no evidence that this tax was ever in fact collected by local assessors. Furthermore, the Mills Committee, for which Mr. Powell was counsel, proposed an income tax bill which would have been open to the same objection if valid.

Mr. Powell's suggestion that the Income Tax law violates the Federal Constitution seems to rest entirely on the theory that the State must tax residents and nonresidents alike. This assumption is unfounded. In fact and in law this State cannot tax residents and nonresidents alike. It can tax residents on their entire income, but it can tax a nonresident only on his income from sources within the State. Consequently there must of necessity be some distinction both in measuring the income to be taxed and the deductions to be allowed. Obviously a nonresident of the State who is taxed only on his income from within the State is not entitled to the same deductions which are given to a resident who pays a tax on his entire income. The making of appropriate distinctions between different classes of cases has never been held to be an unconstitutional discrimination.

The law does undoubtedly work hardship in the case of a nonresident who happens to derive his entire income from within the State and who is consequently taxed on his entire income. This injustice would readily be obviated by an amendment to the law along lines such as have been suggested by Governor Smith, whereby a nonresident whose entire income consists of a salary derived from within the State of New York of not exceeding, say, $10,000, shall receive the same specific exemption of $1,000 if single, or $2,000 if married, as is granted to residents. Such an amendment, if made, should be made as a matter of sound interstate comity and not because of any constitutional question.

Mr. Powell's statement that "a citizen of one State is entitled to the privileges and immunities of every other State and the State of New York cannot by an income tax limit the interstate activities of residents of neighboring States doing business here," is not altogether accurate and is calculated to give an erroneous impression. He presumably refers to that part of the Fourteenth Amendment which provides that "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States." The privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States are not curtailed, nor are their interstate activities limited, by taxing them on their income derived from within the State.

The question of the power of the State to tax nonresidents comes down to a question of jurisdiction. It is well settled that a State has power to tax all persons and property within its jurisdiction. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that the income of a nonresident alien within the United States is subject to income tax by the Federal Government, even to the extent of taxing his income from stocks and bonds of domestic corporations. The principle of this decision and of many other decisions of the same court clearly establishes the power of the State of New York to tax the incomes of nonresidents of the State derived from within the State.

Inasmuch as the power of the State of New York and the tax imposed by the law extend only to incomes actually derived from sources within the State, questions will undoubtedly arise whether in a given case the income of a nonresident is in fact derived from sources within the State and so subject to the tax, and these questions will require judicial interpretation. But the possibility of such questions, which present themselves under any tax law, gives no ground for sweeping and sensational attacks on the constitutionality of the entire law.

So far as the withholding provision is concerned, the error inadvertently made in the closing moments of the Legislature, when the bill was amended so as to change the rate of tax from 2 per cent. to a graduated tax of 1, 2, and 3 per cent., without making a corresponding amendment in the provision requiring the withholding of tax upon nonresidents' salaries at the rate of 2 per cent., has already been corrected by the ruling of the Controller that the two provisions must be read together so that the tax will be withheld only at the rate of 1 per cent. on incomes not exceeding $10,000, and at the rate of 2 per cent. in excess of that amount.

LAURENCE ARNOLD TANZER.

Discrimination in New Jersey.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The alleged discriminatory provisions of the recently enacted New York Income Tax act as it affects the incomes of nonresidents of this State is apparently causing much concern, not only to the individual citizens of New Jersey thereby affected, but also to the taxing authorities of that State. These authorities, including the present Controller as well as his predecessor in that office, while they complain and are preparing energetically to resist discrimination on the part of the New York taxing authorities, nevertheless persist in the defense of a discriminatory statute of their own which is without parallel among taxing statutes. The statute referred to is the so-called "ratio provision" of the New Jersey inheritance or transfer tax act, which reads as follows:

A tax shall be assessed on the transfer of property made subject to tax as aforesaid in this State of a nonresident decedent if all or any part of the estate of such decedent, wherever situated, shall pass to persons or corporations taxable under this act, which tax shall bear the same ratio to the entire tax which the said estate would have been subjected to under this act if such nonresident decedent had been a resident of this State, and all his property, real and personal, had been located within this State, as such taxable property within this State bears to the entire estate, wherever situated; provided that nothing in this clause contained shall apply to any specific bequest or devise of any property in this State.

It is at once apparent that this formula, which by its term applies only to nonresidents, discriminates against nonresidents owning real property lying beyond the New Jersey State boundaries as compared with residents or nonresidents in like case who own no such property. It likewise operates to discriminate against the nonresident owning personal property beyond the jurisdiction of New Jersey as compared with the nonresident in like case owning no such property. The greater the value of the property beyond the jurisdiction the greater the tax due New Jersey, although the value of the property transferred in New Jersey under the statute is of the same value and similarly transferred in any case.

Thus if Mr. Rockefeller or Mr. Carnegie or any other wealthy nonresident citizen should die, leaving shares of stock in New Jersey corporations, their estates would pay a much larger tax than that of the modest investor, although the value of the New Jersey shares should be the same in both cases.

The State of New Jersey admittedly grants no privilege of succession to real property beyond its territorial limits. No more does it grant such privilege of succession to personal property of nonresidents having no situs there.

The anomaly produced by the ratio provision becomes luminous in the case of a farmer who being domiciled in the taxing State owns two farms valued at $5,000 each, one lying within and the other without the State boundaries, and devises both to his widow. Granting an exemption of $5,000, there is no tax. But if the decedent be domiciled in the foreign State the widow is called upon under the operation of the ratio provision to pay a succession tax of $35 upon the same farm within the taxing State. The right of succession to the farm within its boundaries is undoubtedly granted by the taxing State. The right of succession to the farm in the foreign State is not. Wherein is the value of the right to succeed to the farm within the State boundaries increased by the value of the right to succeed to the farm beyond? If it is not increased by and in no way dependent upon the value of the farm beyond the State boundaries, why tax in one case and not in the other?

The argument against taxing succession to land in another State or taking its value into consideration in taxing land in the State of location is equally cogent applied to the cattle grazing there, if the succession taxed is in case of a nonresident decedent.

In fine, not only does the statute in question operate to impose taxes based upon property beyond the jurisdiction in one case and not in the other, but in so doing the ratio provision compels the accordance in case of the nonresident decedent of only proportionate exemptions and proportionate graduated amounts upon which the tax is computed.

A homely analogue to the situation created by the ratio provision in the statute under consideration is found in the case of the crafty shopkeeper who sells the same merchandise at one price to a shopper from the street and at a higher price to the carriage customer. The State of New Jersey, in the above instance, regulates the universal succession to property within its jurisdiction by imposing a higher premium upon the succession to such property equal in value when passing in case of a wealthier nonresident than when passing in case of a poorer nonresident, the successors being of like relationship. In the final analysis it is found that there is no more justification in ethics for the one case than there is legal justification for the other. Condemnation of the practice rests upon the same foundation in both cases:

Classification of customers or taxpayers based upon circumstances which are extraneous considered in their relation to the value of the merchandise sold or to the extent of the protection afforded is fundamentally unsound.

Not only does elementary morality require equality of treatment in either case, but enlightened self-interest also would suggest that those with ample means above all should not be discouraged in the business of investment by such discrimination.

It would therefore seem, in view of the foregoing, that the New Jersey authorities should observe the mote in their own eye and practice what they preach.

LABOR AND THE COURTS

New York, June 23, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Our friends of the American Federation of Labor made utterances on many important subjects which are entitled to serious consideration. They represent a very powerful portion of our community and will be willing to accept friendly criticism.

In two particulars they seem to me to overlook the nature of our Government. What they say about the power of the courts to decide whether a statute is in violation of the Constitution, and also as to the power of injunction, requires reconsideration.

The American Government is based on the proposition that the power is in the people, and that the officers of Government are their agents, to whom they have intrusted certain authority. This authority is not autocratic or absolute. It is defined in a written Constitution, made by the people, and binding upon their officers. Courts are created to which the power is given to decide in case of dispute as to the meaning of this Constitution, and as to whether in passing a particular statute the agents of the people have transcended their powers. The courts have exercised this power from the beginning of the Government. It is in consequence, for example, of the decisions of the Supreme Court that commerce is free between the States, that the Federal Reserve banking system exists, and that Congress has power to regulate foreign immigration. Statutes passed by different Legislatures would have taken from Congress the power to perform these necessary functions. These statutes were declared by the Supreme Court to violate the Constitution which the people had established, and therefore to be void.

It is obvious that unless some peaceful method of deciding such questions had been provided by the United States Constitution the only other method of settling them would have been by force. This means civil war. The Constitution of the United States expressly grants to the Supreme Court power in "all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority." It also provides that the Constitution "shall be the supreme law of the land." To use the language of President Wilson: "Our courts are the balance wheel of the whole constitutional system." As The Federalist states it: "What, for instance, would avail restrictions on the power of the State Legislatures without some constitutional mode of enforcing the observance of them?"

The law in this respect as to the power of the agents of the people does not differ from the law respecting the agents of individuals. Any action of theirs which is not within the power of attorney is not binding upon the principal.

As a part of this same method of deciding controversies by a peaceful appeal to the courts is their power to issue an injunction. This is granted in cases where a man or a group of men is trying to obtain by force what he thinks his right. The court steps in and forbids him forcibly to change the existing position until the question of right is decided by the court. The injunction, for example, has been invoked to protect lines of telegraph or of railroad from forcible interference. The hearing upon the injunction is prompt. If the order of the single Judge is considered erroneous an appeal can immediately be taken. The case is heard promptly upon the merits. There is no legal proceeding more free from technicality than this. It is just as important a protection to the liberty and security of the individual as the writ of habeas corpus. So far from being attacked as an injury to the rights of the individual, it is one of their most important safeguards.

It is very much to be hoped that the time will come when the relations between organized capital and organized labor shall be more exactly defined by law; when the courts shall have power to enforce the rights created by voluntary contracts between them, and when the method of private war which is called a strike, and from which the great majority of our people are the sufferers, will be abolished. Statutes to accomplish this result were under consideration in Congress and in the New York State Legislature. When this country entered the war the labor unions requested that the subject be dropped for the time being, and it was. The strikes which have caused so much suffering in this country since the end of the war emphasize the necessity for reconsideration.

TWO RECEPTIONS.

De Valera's Greeting Contrasted with Mobbing of Our Sailors.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In this morning's issue of THE TIMES you inquire, not without cause: "Where was the Irish Republic" in those soul-racking days when Poland, Greece, and, I may add, a number of other States were struggling under the heel of the oppressor? That question, it seems to me, can be easily answered, for it is a matter of history, and the most ardent, zealous, and vehement supporter of the Sinn Fein cause cannot deny facts which are indisputable. The budding and explosive Sinn Fein Republic, at the time referred to in your editorial, was showing its grateful appreciation of the terrific sacrifices made by the Western nations and the United States in the great cause of world democracy and the freeing of "subject and oppressed peoples" by enthusiastically greeting, in true Donnybrook fashion, American sailors—many of them of Irish extraction—with well-directed volleys of stones, bricks, and other paleolithic souvenirs.

Mr. de Valera may congratulate himself that his reception in this country was not staged along those peculiar and somewhat sanguinary lines accorded to American sailors on their first appearance in certain Irish cities.

The "return of the native" will indubitably afford an immense amount of satisfaction to a certain element of our population, and, though Mr. de Valera may never realise his vaulting ambition and actually become the President of an independent Ireland, he need not be in the least discouraged, for he doubtless has sufficient admirers among us to make it possible for him to achieve peaks of fame and fortune compared to which the Presidency of Ireland is but a mere bagatelle. In view of the immense political power of Tammany Hall and other affiliated organizations, is it not conceivable that Eamonn de Valera may, at some not distant date, become Mayor of the greatest city of the Western Hemisphere, or, failing that, at least attain "greater" glory as a member of the New York Board of Aldermen, and have the privilege and pleasure of handing out the plums of patronage to "the bhoys," not forgetting the Left Wingers of the Rand School?

I hear that, insultingly breaking the precedent of centuries, the German envoys are not invited to the banquet after the signing of the peace. Can't you and the press generally try to secure invitations as a decent evidence to the German people of good-will during peace?

RADICALISM OF THE SETTLEMENTS

Their Record in Social Welfare Work Offered as an Answer to Their Critics

New York, June 26, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Where were these critics of the settlements a quarter of a century ago, when the settlements were giving effective help for the protection of overworked children and underpaid young women by getting child labor laws and sweatshop laws upon the statute books? Where have these critics been ever since? We have not met them before the legislative bodies nor in the courts defending these statutes.

Where were they when the settlements enlisted public opinion against the sweating system; when they turned the light upon the homes of the humblest workers invaded by the goods and machines for which today we have standardized factories; when little children worked by day and by night; when the sick bed was not sacred, but patients in all stages of tuberculosis, propped against pillows, worked at finishing costly cloaks and making cigarettes as long as they could see; when the effective quarantine of these pitiful home workshops was undreamed of? We did not meet our critics by those bedsides nor in search of the children who should be in school.

The record of the settlement movement in this country is long and public. The books, reports and magazine articles containing it would overfill a five-foot shelf, beginning with a modest volume compiled by Robert Archie Wood, head of the East End House, Boston, in 1898, and quickly followed by two reports made for the State of Illinois and the Federal Government, respectively, by a resident of Hull House, the classic essays and books by Jane Addams, "Ethical Gains Through Legislation," by Florence Kelley, "The House on Henry Street," by Lillian D. Wald, and others too numerous to mention.

I, for one, as a forewoman in a bookbindery, struggling with an invalid mother to support on $7 a week, working ten hours a day, despite the frankly-expressed approval of my employer, who said that I could do the work of three, was drifting into a morbid state of mind when the settlement found me and learned of the conditions under which I was struggling. The wonderful contribution given to me by the settlement at that crisis in my life was the needed sympathy and co-operation in helping to organize my co-workers into unions of their trades.

Americanization in its truest sense—the gathering of the ideals and visions of the people who have made the America that we love and honor—has been interpreted by the settlement people, not spasmodically, but continuously, as their obligation to the newcomer, to the restless, and the inarticulate. Long before that word was upon the lips and not always in the heart of the people; long before it was a catchword for the newspapers, the people in the settlement always found their highest privilege as interpreters. Their literature continually emphasizes that, and also draws attention to the strangers in our midst who have brought to America such rich gifts.

The red blood that the Government officially called for and needed was encouraged by the settlements through every phase of humanity of which they have intimate knowledge. In the world's hour of need, when Americans responded so chivalrously to the call made upon them, only those who are within the gates can measure the enormous contribution that was made by people of all nationalities who call America home, because the settlements and neighborhood houses were ready and had interpreted America for many years. Richard Watson Gilder has called the settlements "The House of the Interpreter." What chaos has been avoided, not only in the individual but in the communities, because of the assistance of these understanding people, and what a great debt is owed to the settlement not only by the working people of America, but by all of those who are really patriots!

Because I am one of the multitude who have seen the better America established through the basic principles of the settlement, I ask you to print this letter.

MARY KENNEY O'SULLIVAN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Charles A. Starr, Secretary of the Evangelistic Association, took it upon himself to rush into print in a statement to the Lusk Committee accusing the settlements of the city of being schools and hotbeds of radicalism.

The 'settlements' radicalism consists in engendering and laboring for working ideals long before politicians see the light. Playgrounds, recreation centres, home nursing, maternity, health and industrial insurance, woman suffrage, child labor laws are a few of the things that had their inception and warmest adherents in the New York settlements. If that be radicalism, make the most of it. Individuals who were radicals left the settlements when they found them non-partisan.

I am one of five brothers, all of whom received inspiration at one of the settlements (Henry Street) and the radicalism taught us there made us all evade the draft—by enlisting in service of the army. We were but a small percentage of the many men there who rushed into service gladly and who can attest to the wholesomeness, loyalty, and incalculable value of these institutions.

The settlements need no defense, but the public does, from just such ill-timed, ill-advised and vicious attacks as that made by Mr. Starr.

THE TWO AMENDMENTS.

Southern States Held Not to Blame for the Prohibition Article.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It appears from letters in THE TIMES and other New York papers, as well as numerous editorial articles, that there is a considerable group of persons who still confuse the "two amendments" to the United States Constitution recently submitted to the Legislatures.

The prohibition amendment, ratified by the Legislatures of forty-five States, only eleven of which constitute the real South, cannot be called a sectional measure by any fair-minded person, however it may be criticised otherwise.

True, many Southern States adopted prohibition within their own borders—following the example of Maine, North Dakota, and Kansas—but the nation-wide demand for national prohibition never was sectional; the Anti-Saloon League, the chief instrument of national prohibition, drew most of its funds and support from the North. The chief battlefields preceding the adoption of national prohibition were California and Ohio. In both States the amendment was submitted to popular vote three times since 1912. With women voting, it was defeated three times in California, but in Ohio, which is probably the strongest anti-suffrage State in the Union, having defeated woman suffrage three times at the polls, the "drys" won the last election. When the "drys" carried Ohio and Michigan, the "wets" realized that they were beaten—and the largest breweries in America started to manufacture "near beer."

There are not today more than half a dozen States in the Union where prohibition would be defeated at the polls. California, New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Missouri, and New Jersey might give majorities against. In no other States of the Union would the "wets" have a chance, except possibly in Wisconsin and Massachusetts. The saloons really committed political suicide. They became obnoxious to an increasing number of persons every year, and the thirty or more "dry" majorities at the polls cannot justly be attributed to "cranks" and "fanatics."

Woman suffrage, on the other hand, has been a minority movement, adopted by only fourteen States by a total aggregate majority of only 244,380 votes—and rejected in twenty popular elections in the last six years by a total majority of 1,372,000 votes, a proportion of over three to one plurality against.

Only four weeks ago, the State of Texas defeated woman suffrage by 25,029 majority, the same voters on the same day voting for prohibition by 20,075 majority, thus again demonstrating that popular sentiment is against suffrage and in favor of prohibition.

Prohibition could have been adopted by popular vote in at least forty States—but liquor is an easily transported commodity, and no State could really be "dry" with a lot of breweries and distilleries on its borders, offering a constant premium on "bootlegging" and other methods of evading the State's law.

Suffrage, on the other hand, is in its very nature a local question—so local that a man often loses his vote by moving around the block or across the street and out of his former election district. No suffrage law made by New York affects Pennsylvania in the least. No bordering State is required to have woman suffrage in order to enable women to enjoy—or neglect—the voting privilege in a State where they have it.

The clamor for "revenge" on the South; the charge that "the South made the nation dry" and the demand that the South be "punished" for prohibition by being forced to enfranchise an element that threatens the very foundations of civilization in a large section of America, come not from patriots, not from intelligent citizens, but from selfish and immoral persons who would set back the clock fifty years and plunge the South again into race war simply because they will have a hard time getting a drink after July 1.

MUSIC BY GERMANS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The fact that I have been in hospital recovering from wounds received at Arras over a year ago has prevented the immediate answer to the article "No German Music—Lest We Forget" by Eleonora de Cisneros in THE SUNDAY TIMES MAGAZINE of April 20, 1919.

In the titanic carnage that has been concluded, Germany has waged war atrociously; she has committed outrages that have shocked the civilised world and, like any defeated nation, Germany must and will pay. But as persons who represent the "land of the free," we are not magnanimous when we evince a hatred that is Germanic, and this we do when we say "No German music!" If the United States had beaten England, would we be so foolish as unanimously to declare "No English! No Shakespeare! No Milton! No Shelley!" If we did we would only be depriving ourselves and the future generations of the pleasure of the world's greatest geniuses, and most of them we find were opposed to war. When we say "No German music" we are closing our opera houses and concert halls to such geniuses as Beethoven, Bach, Brahms, Mozart, Haydn, and Wagner. Must we have concert after concert of nothing but French, English, Russian, and Italian "novelties"? Heaven forbid! This was tried in London and I recall one night at Queen's Hall, London, when a Wagnerian number was interrupted by a German air raid.

America leads the world in many things, but she is an infant in culture and unfortunately is forced to import culture, especially music and musicians from abroad. Are we, as a progressive nation, going to deny ourselves the pleasure of the world's greatest music and carry this abominable "hate" spirit (which we deplored in the Germans) on forever and ever?

FOREIGN DOMINATION.

League Unlikely to Make America an Oppressed Nationality.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Opponents of the League of Nations have not yet exhausted the dreadful possibilities into which we are being persuaded. Senator Reed, addressing the South, says the league will be dominated by the colored races. Senators Borah and Johnson, turning toward our loyal Irish voters, argue bitterly that Great Britain will control. That enlightened Protestant Senator Sherman has audible fears of world domination by the Vatican. The New Republic conjures an artificial spectre of French imperialism.

For a decade or more the Pan American Union of Nations on the Western Hemisphere has been steadily strengthening. Only two factors have impeded this movement. In the past both British and German shipping and commerce in South American ports have surpassed our own. But now, with destruction of British and German shipping and with great increase of our own, the balance is going the other way. The other obstacle to Pan American union has been a persistent misinterpretation of our Monroe Doctrine in Latin America. But by the League of Nations covenants the Monroe Doctrine is recognized and indorsed by all the world as a protective principle. Unless certain jingo Senators succeed in tacking on some more aggressive and imperialistic interpretation, the old fear and jealousy among Latin Americans will be forever removed. Under these conditions and with our rapidly developing intercourse, it is fair to suppose that the prestige of our Government in Latin America will far exceed that of any European power. This should be true without reference to special cases, such as Cuba and Panama.

Furthermore, it is obvious that in many of the small countries of Europe our influence is more powerful than that of any other nation. In Belgium, because its stricken population was fed for four years by the Hoover commission. In Poland, Czechoslovakia and Jugo-slavia because of blood ties with millions of our own citizens, because of food relief given and because of the great service of President Wilson's diplomacy in establishing their national existence. It is significant that most of these little countries show a marked preference now for American military and civilian aid as against similar aid from Europe. In addition to all this there are other nations, such as China and Liberia, where our influence is admittedly superior. In Pacific Ocean problems Canada and Australia think as we do.

It may be added that the unequaled position of the United States in international finance would of itself prevent the voice of our delegates from being characterized wholly by feebleness.

World domination may be far from our thoughts, but when opponents insist upon describing the league as the probable oppressor of weak nations the most rudimentary sense of humor should save them from including the United States in that classification. Whatever else may be the effect of this effort to establish world relations on a firm, reasonable and peaceful basis, surely the most timid American can scarcely fear that our nation is being asked to submit to a foreign yoke.

Lesson of the German Warships.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While the whole world—at least the allied portion of it—must have been somewhat startled, if not actually amazed, Sunday morning at the news of the sinking of the interned German fleet, I presume the average person said to himself, "Oh, well, what does it matter? Germany will sign the treaty on Monday, anyway. A few German warships, afloat or otherwise, in Germany or out of it, are of little consequence." Even some of our own naval officers are quoted as regarding the incident as "good riddance."

I, too, had come to the above complacent opinion, when, on my way to church with my daughters, I received a decided shock that completely changed my point of view. I had described to them the scuttling of the ships when the younger, a girl of 12, like a stroke of lightning out of a clear sky, said, "Why, father, the Germans had no right to sink those ships. They weren't theirs to sink! They turned them over to the Allies as a part of the armistice agreement. This looks to me like another 'scrap of paper.'" There you have it—an opinion "Hidden from the wise and prudent, but revealed unto babes!" And still there are obstructionists in Washington doing everything in their power to plunge the world into political chaos.

These and others, knowingly or not, intentionally or otherwise, are playing the German game. Does not this last act of the outlawed nation prove that she is still in the throes of her lust for vengeance and power, and that even though now, on her knees, she will sign the treaty, it is still impossible to trust her?

PERSIA'S DEBIT AND CREDIT

Present Claims on the Allies and Her Aid to the Enemy

New York, June 26, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is now eight months since the armistice was signed. Peace, thank God, has at last been restored between the Allies, America, and Germany, but in the remote regions of so-called neutral Persia we are informed by an American entitled to know that at present it is not safe for any native Christian to go to Urumia and Salmas, where all villages are absolutely deserted, both by Moslem and Christian, and the former Garden of Eden is ruled by brigands of the type of Villa.

Urumia and Salmas are the back door of Persia to Kurdistan. It is a most beautiful and fertile region in the northwestern part of Persia bordering on Turkish Kurdistan, some 200 miles or less southeast of Mount Ararat, and about 150 miles northeast of Mosul and not very far from the lake and city of Van, the ancient capital of Armenia. For four years the region has been trampled under foot of Russian, Turkish, Kurdish, Assyrian, and Armenian soldiers. The British have at last found a place there and in other parts of Persia.

During all these years Persia has claimed that she was neutral. Her Central Government has nominally been so. But German propaganda has so blinded the average Persian that he makes believe he is neutral, while Persians of Tartar and Kurdish origin have been fighting side by side with the Turks and Germans, against Russians, Englishmen and their auxiliaries, the Assyrian and Armenian peoples. Some of the blackest acts of this war were perpetrated in this region, acts that compare with and surpass some of the brutalities in Turkey and elsewhere. These acts were committed by Persians encouraged by the Government in the province of Azerbaijan. Indeed, the Persians stopped only when they knew it for a fact that the war had been won by the Allies and that there might be a reckoning for the acts committed against those who were fighting on the Allies' side. Among such acts may be mentioned the murder of Mar Shimun, the Assyrian Patriarch, by Simku, the Persian Kurd; the murder of Archbishop Sontag, the Apostolic Delegate of the Pope to Persia, and with him 600 persons, by Arshad-i-Humayoun, an officer of Persian gendarmery. The former took place in Salmas, and the latter at Urumia in Sontag's own home and mission.

It would probably be unfair to blame Persians for all that has taken place at this remote region of Persia, where the Turks and Kurds were strong. But there must be drawn a line between the Persians of whom we read in the classic books of Iran and these Tartar or Ajam (Turkish) Persians in northwestern Persia. After four years of bitter struggle in these regions the fact remains that these Persians are equally responsible for the destruction of property and the taking of life. The Central Government was on the verge of declaring war on the Entente long before the collapse of Russia. The revolution in the latter country emboldened the Persians, and when the Russian frontier crumbled it was difficult to restrain Persians from their admiration and profound sympathy for everything German.

The relation between the Persians and their fellow-countrymen, the Assyrian (Nestorian, Chaldean) and Armenian Christians, was formerly a pleasant one. But it was that of a peasant to his landlord, where the Christian had very little say in the matter of common interest to both. He was tolerated and allowed to live and exist as a profitable tenant. This is no place to relate the work of the various missions and what they did for the whole community, Christians and Moslems alike.

But the coming of the Russians put a different complexion on the whole situation. As their influence grew stronger, the feeling of the Moslems toward the Christians changed, especially when there was any talk of the rights of the Christians. After the declaration of war the sympathy of the Christians remained with the Allies, while the Persians, as the whole, sided with the Germans and Turks. On the withdrawal of the Russians in 1915 the Persians plundered and killed Christians, in some cases rivaling Kurds and Turks. As the Christians had never undertaken any hostile act against Persia, the latter, as a neutral, should have seen the situation and not suffered it, dealing fairly with them. But this was too much for them, and soon they drifted into the arms of the Turks and became their bitter partisans.

The things came to a crisis in the Spring of 1918, when the German and slaughter in the West was at its height. Its effect on these remote regions was like magic. The Persians could no longer be restrained. The Russian Revolution having caused the crumbling of the Caucasus Battle lines, the British, French, and a few Russian officers urged the Assyrians, who had come from across the border after they were driven out by the Turks, to take up arms and stop the rush of the Turks through Persia toward Baku and the Caucasus. To this the Assyrians and the Armenians of the region responded loyally, believing it to be their duty to stand by the Allies at their dark moments. In all their battles the Christians were more than victorious. In this the Persians not only sympathized with the advancing Turks and Kurds, but actually began hostilities and encouraged and helped the Turks as an ally. In twelve battles the Assyrians were more than victorious and maintained their own. At last the Armenians of Van had to retire, and after Salmas was also left to the enemy they combined to protect Urumia till their ammunition became exhausted, and they had at last to withdraw south with some 75,000 men, women, and children. The Persian nobles and officers joined in the pursuit of the refugees, and many Christian women are even now in Moslem harems. The Persians share the responsibility of these cruel acts with the Turks and Kurds.

The object in writing this letter is not to cast blame on the Persians, blameworthy as they are, but to call the attention of America and others to a peculiar problem arising in a corner of Persia in the dealing with which Persia is utterly incompetent.

Persia is claiming additional territory to its extensive possessions. It wishes to extend to Turkestan, to the Caucasus, and to Kurdistan, but she is not able to keep her own house in order. She rightly asks for 33,000,000 francs indemnity for State property lost during the war, and 3,500,000 for private property. But what of the Christian population, who have lost all? And most of what they have lost was found in Persian homes. The Kaiser and his leaders are to be brought to the bar of justice, but what of the murderous Persian Kurds and Tartars, whose crimes are, we are sorry to say, only too plain?

The Persians have been busy maligning the Christians, who have no representative at the Persian court, to such an extent that they have till now prevented Christians from returning to their homes. Surely the Allies have a duty to these people. Are they going to listen to Persian tales and expatriate the Christians who have left their vineyards and their possessions, and are dying to return?

Are the Persians really neutral? Have they been pro-ally? Have the Allies no other duties than to allow Armenian and Syrian committees to feed these people on their crumbs. Will they get any indemnity? Why should they lose 70 per cent. of their effectives?

There are a dozen men at Paris pleading the cause of these people. Let us hope the daydawn of freedom and security is not far off.

PAUL SHIMMON.

A LETTER FROM HOME

Brooklyn, June 18, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Inasmuch as you have devoted much space to the Armenian cause, now in a critical situation awaiting a proper settlement, I am herewith inclosing the translation of a letter which I have received this week from Turkey, written by a friend, after five years of anxious and dreary silence.

Such a letter received by me is only a sample of many which the Armenians in this country are getting from home. I trust that this sample letter will be of some help and light to many friends of Armenia's cause who will see to it that she is rescued unconditionally from the claws of the twentieth century cannibals.

The letter follows:

"Develu, Fenesseh, Feb. 9, 1919.

"Venerable Fellow-Countryman and Brother:

"I feel that with much anxiety you have been expecting to hear from your parents and brother. But, alas! they have passed as eternal martyrs as the result of the Turkish persecutions. Presently, being one of your acquaintances and relatives, I feel it to be my duty to break the necessary news. * * *

"We were deported from Samsun, and under the pangs of every-day death and after twenty days of journey, we reached Shar-Kishla; and on the following day they led us through the mountains to take us to Harpoot, and then to the deserts there to cut our throats and fill the river Euphrates with our bodies. But hardly were we on our journey for two days, through the command of Mouammer Bey, the Governor of Sivas, [I know too well this gentleman when he was the Mayor of Nikaar in 1908, after the Constitution was declared, and he made a name as a liberal thinker,] they separated the men-folks and began to cut them into pieces by axes. The great bulk of the deported Armenians from Samsun, at least 5,000 of them, were destroyed during this wholesale slaughter. My brother, Nishan, was among them. Fortunately or unfortunately, I with some others were left alive, and continued our journey with the women, without any bread and water, until we reached Hassan-Chelebi, three days' distance from Malatia. Here, again, we men and children were separated from the women and herded in a stable. At midnight they took us out, all 270 persons, and got themselves ready to cut us with axes and sickles.

"Just then there came, riding on horseback, Cheteh Reisi Hadji Agha, [chief of a Kurd tribe,] and asked, 'Is there any doctor or druggist among you?' From the place where I was tied I answered, saying, 'I am a pharmacist.' They untied my hands, but the rest they began to murder. Imagine my feelings! On the morning they took me to my folks, who were not yet departed to their new destination. The reason why they kept me alive was this: One of the men of the murdering gang had been wounded and needed medical help. Within two months I was able to heal the man, and for this I was spared with my mother, sister, and the two children of my brother. Here we stayed eight months.

"Every day I was an eyewitness to many monstrous scenes. I had to bear the situation unvoluntarily. During this period, every day and from all parts, Armenians were brought in and taken out to fill the Euphrates. Likewise there came your mother, sister, sister-in-law, Mariam, and relatives. My first question was to know as to what became to Yenovk, your brother. Their answer was this: 'He fought heroically in the house, and was burned to death by the Government.' On hearing this I seemed stricken as by lightning, and began to cry. They told me the facts as follows: The Turkish gendarmes had come to take him and others in the house. They refused to surrender, shooting some of them who tried to break in the house. On this the Government surrounds the house with additional forces, and, pouring petroleum around it, burns the whole house. * * *

"Your folks after staying at Hassan-Chelebi for the space of two days, were carried toward the Euphrates, to die in the claws of monster Dr. Reshid, the Governor of Diarbekir; and there they all were destroyed, annihilated! My brother, our tears and sighs, our supplications and cries, brought the rocks and the cliffs to feelings and sympathy, but not these brute Turks. Their hearts were not touched in any sense or degree; but, on the contrary, the more they killed the more vicious they became. The blood they poured maddened them to indulge in diabolic monstrosities above any human description."

But now the envoys of the professional murderers are in Paris and consulting with the Peace Conference venerables as to how they can be spared to carry on their only profession of wiping out the residue of Christian civilization, the Armenians!

SERVING NOTICE ON THE HUN OF THE ROAD

DURING the fifteen years I have bought, sold, driven and participated in the making of motor vehicles, I have silently watched the growing menace of reckless driving. I have seen good drivers lose all pleasure in motoring because the growing number of race-with-death speed kings, bound for somewhere, have made Belgian Turnpikes of the People's Highways. With no other motive than to make motoring a safe and sane pleasure, I ask the private car owner to

Stop This Menace Before It Stops Us

THE League for Motorists' Protection has been formed for this purpose.

The membership consists of private car owners who have not been convicted of speeding or reckless driving or driving while intoxicated this year (HACKMEN, TRUCK DRIVERS AND TAXICAB DRIVERS ARE NOT ELIGIBLE FOR MEMBERSHIP).

The need for such a league is vital. Private owners of automobiles are at the mercy of a certain class of truck, taxi and hack drivers and fanatical speed kings who seem to take delight in making other motorists' lives miserable. In many instances of late, malefactors of this breed who have the instincts of gunmen and gangsters without their courage, have brought many of my friends to grief. I recall at least nine instances of this kind within the past week.

In most cases these bandits of the highway stay inside the law and nothing is left the public except a civil suit for damages, and it is usually true that most of them have their cars and other property (if any) beyond the reach of court process. It might be possible to reach them if officers of the law could be everywhere at once, but these shrewd lawbreakers are usually careful to prey upon the public when no officer is at hand.

If they knew, however, that their reckless, vicious acts would be observed by one or more members of a protective league and reported promptly, they would realize that in a very short time their complete record would be on file and that a powerful organization could take that record and have them banished from the road.

Under existing conditions it is impossible to bring an offender to judgment except upon the complaint of an officer of the law because licenses cannot be revoked except upon court convictions and such convictions are impossible in the absence of arrests, and, as stated, the number of officers is limited and they are widely scattered.

It is up to the motorist, himself, through proper organization, to secure the protection he needs.

Every motorist knows, furthermore, that one of the greatest hazards of the road grows out of the carelessness of the pedestrian. While it will be the purpose of the League for Motorists' Protection to protect the pedestrian in every way possible and to encourage careful driving, it will at the same time have for an avowed purpose the work of helping the pedestrian to avoid unnecessary risks and thoughtless acts that may lead to his physical discomfort.

It is a well-known fact that in cases of unavoidable accidents where pedestrians are injured, the first reaction of foot travellers is to take sides against the motorist. This places the burden of proof upon the motorist. It is the firm belief of the organizers of this League that a strong fraternal spirit will develop among the members, to the end that each and every one will be on watch to see that no injustice is done.

You men and women who motor in and around New York City recall instances where you or your friends have been victimized by professional witnesses and ambulance chasers who have a way of gathering around upon the heels of an accident and whose testimony and counsel are frequently influenced by personalities, profits and prejudices rather than by right or wrong. With the emblem of this organization on your car you would be assured of the presence in almost any locality, at any hour, of one or more fellow members of the league who would protect you from any and every form of injustice.

The League is not a profit-making organization. Every dollar of the membership fees will be spent in increasing the membership and protecting the members against the Hun of the Road, bringing to the attention of the proper authorities wilful, reckless drivers who endanger the lives and property of motorists or others. A legal department will be maintained and a sufficient clerical force to handle the details.

If the rights of a member are assailed he promptly files a statement with the League. The League does the rest, and presently every reckless driver's complete record will be on file at League headquarters. If he persists (as he probably will), he will be banished from the highways of New York and vicinity.

There will be no assessments. The yearly dues will be the only charge.

No officer in the League will be paid a salary.

The treasurer of the organization is James V. Boise, manager Chatham & Phoenix National Bank, corner Broadway and Sixty-first Street, New York City. He will receive all moneys and act as custodian of the League funds, and reports will be made regularly by Price, Waterhouse & Co., who will act as the League's auditors.

The membership fee is $4 yearly, which will also cover two League emblems, the Red Badges of Caution, similar to the design appearing on this page. These emblems will be loaned only. They are to be returned if for any reason a member severs his connection with the League. The League will hold the copyright and will be the sole licensor. The emblems will be attached to the front and rear of a member's car.

A suitable membership card will be given to each member. These cards will properly identify the owner, so that there will be no doubt that the car displaying the badge belongs to a member of the League.

I believe the time has come to take the first step toward changing automobiling from a hazard to a pleasure; to put a stop to irresponsible motor drivers who make driving a peril by the reckless operation of motor cars; to seek by tabulation and legislation to restrain taxi bandits, who are too busy watching the meter to stop after cutting a motorist off; to make an example of the speed maniac, who, in his ruthless haste to gain a car-length, "sideswipes" your car and, escaping injury himself, drives on.

In short, this League of Motorists is banded together to observe caution and to make the public highways so safe that all members, their wives, mothers, daughters and sisters may operate automobiles without the everlasting fear of road autocrats who have but one thought—themselves.

I believe so firmly in the necessity for such a League that I have personally defrayed the preliminary expense incidental to forming this protective body.

NOTES ON CURRENT ART

AN American painter who has lived for some years in Paris, Harry B. Lachman, recently has received the honor of having two of his landscapes purchased by the French Government for the Luxembourg Museum. This is a rather special mark of appreciation, as it is said that the Commission of the Luxembourg never before has selected two works at one time by the same artist. The titles of the pictures chosen are "Uzerche: Corrèze" and "Antibes." The former is a fine composition showing the buildings in "mass formation" on the slopes of a hill dominated by the castle, the irregular roof lines making a picturesque linear pattern that runs through the design like a guiding thread in a tapestry.

Marcel Pays, a French critic, says of Mr. Lachman's work shown in a recent exhibition in Paris, that it displays the personality of a true painter, preoccupied by harmonious composition, sincere design and well-observed color, without vain searching for clever technique. He adds that his manner is fresh, sturdy, and honest, that his landscapes of Menton and Antibes are bathed in a happy sunlight, and that his pictures are the result of a just and clear vision. Mr. Lachman expects to hold an exhibition of his work in this city about the first of next December.

A Memorial Window for St. Philip's Church.

A memorial window in St. Philip's Church, Brooklyn, is to be dedicated today. It is the gift of Leonard H. Smith in memory of his daughter, Marion Loveridge Smith, who died in her sixteenth year. The window is in two lights, containing figure designs, and the subject text, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Behind the figures of Christ and Mary is a background of grapevines climbing on a trellised arbor. The window is of opalescent favrile glass and comes from the Tiffany Studios.

A Correction.

In the article "Sculpture by George de Forest Brush and Others" in the Magazine Section this week the memorial statue for the grave of Mrs. Adams in Rock Creek Cemetery is attributed to Daniel Chester French instead of Saint Gaudens, whose work it is.

The Exhibition of American Art for Paris.

William A. Coffin has returned from Paris and reports all well with the exhibition of American art scheduled for the Luxembourg in May, in spite of deferred dates. It was the not uncommon situation of the galleries not being ready and the staff of workmen and attendants not completed, and with the Summer season approaching it was considered best to postpone the exhibition until the 1st of October. A small committee of American artists was formed to select some twenty or more works ever there to be added to the collection made up in the United States. Walter Gay, Alexander Harrison, and H. O. Tanner are on the committee.

Mr. Coffin adds: "The postponement was made for the best interests of the exhibition, and it is hoped that our contributing artists will not be inconvenienced by the delay in the return of their works. The only difference is that they should be back here by the end of the year instead of in October, as at first expected. Our insurance covers the extended period."

The Activities of the Boston Museum.

The most important acquisitions in the way of fifteenth-century prints, made by the department of prints, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, last year, were the twenty-six engravings by Israhel van Meckenem, all in the first states, of unsurpassed quality, from the Henry Huth collection. "The Large Passion," "The Flagellation," "Christ Carrying His Cross," and "The Lamentation," were gifts from Miss Katherine Eliot Bullard, Mrs. T. Jefferson Coolidge, Jr., George Peabody Gardner, and Charles Cobb Walker, respectively. The rest of the prints by Van Meckenem were purchased with the duplicate print fund, the special print fund and the Stephen Bullard fund. The list includes the "Christ at Emmaus," and most of the series of the New Testament subjects, such as the "Nativity," the "Marriage at Cana," &c. Since no authoritative monograph in the English language on Israhel van Meckenem exists, Mr. Richter has translated, for the use of the student of prints, Max Geisberg's study, published in Strassburg, 1903.

The only other fifteenth century engravings acquired by the print department were N. A. Mair von Landshut's "Virgin and Child with St. Anne" and Matthäis Zasinger's "The Lovers," the latter a British Museum duplicate. There were some noteworthy acquisitions of seventeenth century works, which included eight gifts from William A. Sargent—two important Callots, "Vue du Louvre" and "Vue du Pont Neuf, de la Tour et de l'Ancienne Porte de Nesle," with works by Salvator Rosa, Ottavio Leoni, Michel Lasne, Melchior Küsell, and Jacob de Bye. Among the purchases may be mentioned two portraits by William J. Delff, from the Halsey collection: Claude's "Campo Vaccino," from the Tiffin and Crawhall collections; two portraits by Jacob Louys, those of Philip IV. of Spain and his wife, and a group of portraits by Peter van Sampel, from the Halsey collection.

Gifts of modern or contemporary works included a group of eleven etchings by the late Charles A. Vanderhoof, from his widow, and prints by Paul Helleu, Frederick Overbeck, D. Y. Cameron, D. Shaw MacLaughlan, R. Rutcka, and other artists. The department of prints purchased a score of lithographs by Auguste Raffet, (two sets, both of military subjects, the "Frise de Constantine" and the "Retraite de Constantine,") three prints by Gavarni, from the Halsey collection; two by Jean Gigoux, from the same sale, with works by C. H. Shannon, Allen Lewis, Adolphe Lafosse, Achille Devéria, and Huber.

Mr. Carrington's report, the thirty-second report of the department, is now issued in brochure by itself, with several illustrations. One of these shows the "Virgin and Child with St. Anne," by Mair von Landshut, in which there is that diverting discrepancy in the scale of various figures which marks so many of the fifteenth-century prints and paintings, and three of the newly acquired engravings by Israhel van Meckenem—"The Christ at Emmaus," the "Nativity," and the "Marriage at Cana." Since the period covered by the report the etched work of Van Dyck is at last complete in the museum collections, and is now on view in the exhibition room.

In the recent bulletin the educational work of the museum is described with enthusiasm. The writer says:

"Thirty-odd years ago Mark Twain, in 'Innocents Abroad,' was delighting his readers with satiric observations concerning the guides who led visitors through the museums of Europe. They were extravagant in statement and uncertain as to facts. Their aim was to astonish; to encourage appreciation of works of art was as far from their intention as it was beyond their power. And in quite recent years the writer overheard one of the tribe expatiating upon the vast number of cubes of glass used in making a mosaic copy of Raphael's 'Transfiguration'; of suggestion that such a procedure might be deemed illogical there was, of course, no word.

"Such was museum guidance. Today we have another standard. Following the lead of this museum, which first established decent service, those institutions which take their public duty seriously now offer guidance which has as its keynote, not wonder, but appreciation. The speakers do not merely repeat the information given on the labels; they give what the label cannot—the spirit and the mood of the creator. The visitor, adolescent or adult, is encouraged to study the work of art with sympathetic understanding, that he may appreciate its quality to the utmost of his capacity.

"It may to some seem a waste of time so to stress this matter of modern museum guidance. Yet, knowledge of the museum's activities in the field of instruction is not so general as one might suppose. Every one has long since accepted the fact that books may be freely borrowed from a public library; it is a commonplace of modern civic life. But that the museum is free to all and that merely by asking for it one may have guidance—guidance based on appreciation—are facts that as yet have not been generally apprehended."

PASSING OF THE HORSE.

THE Sanitary Bureau of the Department of Health requires the owner of every livery stable to procure a permit. The statistics show that the number of these stables is decreasing rapidly, and, proportionally, the number of horses kept in them. In two years the figures, which have just been compiled as the result of an annual survey, show a decrease of 2,664 occupied stables, with a diminution of 32,208 in the number of horses.

This number is based on a total of 106,036 in 1917, and the decline has been practically 30 per cent.

Welcome, Peace!

CIGARS UNITED

EVERY citizen of this great Republic can be justly proud of his country's record in the World War now happily brought to a final conclusion by the signing of the Peace Treaty.

With a unity of purpose that not only drew from the world at large its acknowledgement of our unselfish devotion to the highest ideals, but surprised even ourselves when the supreme test came, we have shown as never before the strength of our national character.

It has been said, we were so engrossed in business affairs that we were suspected of being no better than a country of "dollar chasers." The War has seen that reputation of sordidness lived down. Throughout the trying crises of the War the higher aims of justice, humanity and honor have led us on to the lofty goal where Right enthroned makes of Might a servant, not a Master.

No war job was too big for us, no obstacle so insurmountable, no sacrifice so fearsome that we could not face it with forces of men, might and money, made resistless by a lofty conception of the noblest use to which they can be put.

Now for the glorious rewards of Peace!

Let us show that national character is as strong in Peace as in War.

First of all, let us show it in the unity of spirit which gave us and our Allies a victory in arms.

Let every mother's son of us find his appointed post and fill it valiantly. Let every man with his shoulder to the wheel strain for a united prosperity, keeping always in mind, as one with another we resume our peaceful lifework, those ideals of fairness which alone make for lasting success.

To the United States, first, last and all the time let us dedicate our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor.

To this pledge of loyalty to home and country, let us all subscribe anew, that we may worthily share in a Peace we helped to win, and that in our American citizenship thus preserved from aggression, we may rejoice with all the love men should have for a home and country that are the best the sun shines on.

THE WILD WEST DIVISION.

American Expeditionary Forces,
Office of the Commander in Chief,
France, Feb. 20, 1919.

Major Gen. William H. Johnston,
Commanding 91st Division, A. E. F.

My dear General Johnston:

It gives me great pleasure to extend to you and the officers and men of the 91st Division my compliments upon their splendid record in France.

Arriving on July 12, the division was thrown into active fighting in the Meuse-Argonne offensive without previous training in the line. From Sept. 26 to Oct. 3 it was actively engaged in this offensive, making an advance of 13 kilometers against strong opposition, capturing the towns of Very, Gesnes, and Epinonville. When the division was withdrawn on Oct. 3, the 181st Brigade remained in the battleline until Oct. 12, its units operating with the 32d and 1st Divisions. In the middle of October the division was attached to the 7th Army Corps of the 6th French Army in Flanders. Between Oct. 31 and Nov. 2, the division made an advance of 11 kilometers, capturing the town of Audenarde. Crossing the Scheldt River on Nov. 10 and 11, the division was in pursuit of the enemy when the armistice ended hostilities.

It was gratifying to see your troops in such good physical shape, but still more so to know that the moral tone of all ranks is so high, which it is hoped will continue even after their return to civil life. Sincerely yours,

JOHN J. PERSHING.

THE foregoing letter of commendation was written to the commander of the 91st Division, known as the "Wild West Division." The men were recruited from California, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, Utah, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, and Alaska. The bulk of the division received ten months' preliminary training at Camp Lewis, Washington. The first orders to sail for France were issued on June 10, 1918. By July 17 the men were stationed in rest camps in France and in England.

Aug. 1 saw the division in the training area in the Department of Haute Marne, with Divisional Headquarters established at Montigny-le-Roi. After gaining a month's intensive training in this area, they were ordered to the vicinity of Gonderecourt in preparation for their participation in the contemplated reduction of the St. Mihiel salient. The division was held in reserve in the territory of Sorcy-sur-Meuse. By Sept. 16, however, the St. Mihiel objective had been taken, and the 91st Division was moved to Autrecourt. Here they were apprised of the fact that they were to take an active part in the smash through the Argonne. The division was assigned to the 5th Army Corps of the United States Army.

In the Argonne.

On Sept. 25 the final orders were issued and the last preparations made to take over the trenches held by the French. The American front extended from the Aisne on the west to the Meuse on the east, a stretch of some eighteen miles. The 91st Division was placed in bivouac in the Forêt de Hesse. Their orders were to attack almost due north between Avocourt and Vauquis on Sept. 26. At 2:30 o'clock in the morning all the guns of the corps and the divisional artillery, silently up to that moment, went into action together. As soon as the barrage lifted the soldiers rushed ahead and took the enemy front line trenches at Cheppy Woods. These were found to have been deserted by the enemy. The first waves of the division penetrated into the Bois de Cheppy and in spite of the thick forests, full of wire entanglements and wrecked and torn by the bombardments, they reached the German positions at La Neuve Grange Farm and along the Ravin de Lai Fuon. Heavy enemy machine-gun fire was encountered at these points. The German machine guns were, however, silenced, and the troops went ahead, taking position after position. The Village of Very was captured after strong resistance. Headquarters were established here after the day's fighting.

The second day of the offensive saw a continuation of the advance. Units of the division passed through Epinonville. The close of the day found the line of this sector of the American Army running through Epinonville, Eclisfontaine, and Les Bouleaux Bois. The Bois de Cierges was the objective for the third day. This, too, was taken in the face of strong machine-gun fire. Advancing units of the division captured Bois de Baulny and Tronsol Farm.

The hardest fighting was on Sept. 29. Through some error in orders, the division, instead of supporting the front of a sector of some scant two kilometers, found itself ahead of the flanking American troops and was forced to spread out over a front of eight kilometers. During the night, however, orders were sent for the division to withdraw and concentrate on a smaller front. This period of withdrawal, lasting from Sept. 30 to Oct. 4, was extremely trying. For five days the men were exposed to incessant firing.

On the Ypres Front.

On the 6th of October, the division, with the exception of the 181st Brigade, which stayed in action until the 12th of October, was relieved and withdrew to the rear. The 181st Brigade saw very heavy fighting while holding a front of a kilometer and a half between the points known as Hill 289 and Hill 255. Their valor during the period of detachment from their division gained for them the highest commendation from the officers under whom they were fighting.

After a short rest the entire division was ordered to move to the Ypres salient in Belgium. On Oct. 28 the 91st passed over to the direct command of the French Army of Belgium. The French were preparing to carry the Scheldt River. The 91st was ordered to take Audenarde and to drive the enemy from the territory east of the Scheldt. Their first objective in this program was a point west of Spitaals Bosschen; the second, the heights of Waalen and Kleihoek; the third and final one, the Scheldt River. The attack was started on the morning of Oct. 31. By Nov. 2 the American troops were in possession of Audenarde and were ready to cross the Scheldt. Preparations were made to construct bridges to effect a crossing during the night of Nov. 3-4. That evening, however, orders were received from headquarters to retire to a rest area east of Vive St. Eloi. On Nov. 8 the division was again ordered to the front to effect the final crossing. This was to take place on Nov. 11. At the last moment, however, the orders were countermanded and the men informed that the armistice with Germany had been signed.

The next movement of the 91st was toward the frontier of Germany. The first week of December found the division moving into an area near Dunkerque. Their stay there was short. The next movement was to the Le Mans area in France, where they stayed until ordered home.

SOCIAL UNIT'S FUTURE

Block Organization, After a Trial in Cincinnati, Awaits Verdict of Country as to Its Success

BORN in Manhattan in 1918, but reared in Cincinnati to a lusty growth, the National Social Unit Organization has sent emissaries back to its birthplace with instructions to tell all about it and help determine the future of the movement. Offices have just been opened at 1 Madison Avenue, where from now until the last of the year a group of "unit" propagandists will scatter information about the organization.

The organization advertised about two and a half years ago for a community of 15,000 people somewhere in the United States which would be willing to try out its plan. Sixteen cities responded favorably, and Cincinnati, with well federated social activities, a fine municipal university and with one of the best general hospitals in the United States, was chosen. The Mohawk-Brighton district of Cincinnati, a section populated largely by a native born working class of Americans of skilled occupations, was selected as the experimental laboratory there. The original plan called for an experiment of three years, at the end of which time the work done was to be evaluated and a decision reached as to its extension.

As it has worked out in the Mohawk-Brighton district, two fundamental ideas of organization are involved. First, for the purpose of procuring the constant, active supervision of 100 per cent. of the people over community affairs and also for the purpose of procuring representation by persons who actually know the people they represent. A block organization was formed, consisting of a block committee, or council of seven, elected by preferential ballot by all the men and women in the block more than 18 years old, who in turn selected the block worker or block executive who sits on a central citizens' committee and forms one-half of the neighborhood administration.

Groups were organized from the community, physicians to plan for public health, nurses to plan nursing, recreation workers to study and plan for the community's play needs, the trade unions to report the working man's point of view in the solution of neighborhood problems, business men to assist in the neighborhood business administration, and teachers to plan a program of neighborhood education. That may be called the skeleton of the organization. How it worked out was told in THE TIMES on March 16 last.

Gifford Pinchot was chosen Chairman of the National Citizens' Council of the Social Unit Organization. The other members of the national group were Oliver Newman, John Joy Edson, Felix Frankfurter, Mrs. Alexander Kohut, Mrs. Charles L. Tiffany, and many other well-known men and women. Mrs. Tiffany, a pioneer in promoting the Social Unit idea, succeeded Mr. Pinchot as Chairman in the Winter of 1917.

Speaking about the organization's future, Mrs. Tiffany said the other day:

"The national committee is now looking toward the end of the year and the conclusion of the initial three-year experiment. In the meanwhile we propose to have the results of the three-years effort evaluated by as competent and representative a group of experts as can be got together throughout the country. Their report will be presented to the people of the United States, possibly at a national conference representative of territories and occupations. To build up a national membership representative of such territories and interests will be the next task of the national organization. As a step in that direction we are opening a New York office.

"Such a representative group will have to make the final decision as to an extension of the social unit plan.

"Of course, many ideas are already being proposed. Many cities are already considering the social unit plan with a view to adapting parts of it in their municipalities. We hope to be able to advise such cities and help them, as they need help. Many of us are particularly anxious to see the plan carried out experimentally on a citywide basis in some enterprising and progressive city.

Another representative of the Social Unit Organization, in discussing its work in relation to that of the Community Councils of National Defense, said that the two were aiming at the same objective, to bring all the people into a more active, intelligent, and continuous participation in their own affairs, to vitalize municipal government and bring it closer to the lives of the people, but that the "technique" was very different. The Community Councils have a blanket program; they are getting neighborhoods together and using numbers of means of doing it. The Social Unit promoters have a distinct theory of unit organization, and their whole attitude toward its application is experimental. Having applied the principles of organization for three years in one district, they announce their readiness to extend on a citywide basis only those parts of the plan whose results have been demonstrated.

WHAT ABOUT OUR MARINERS?

By RALPH E. CROPLEY.

ONE by one the war clubs and canteens are disappearing from our cities. With a navy to number 250,000 as a peace basis, an army which may number 500,000 men permanently, and the merchant marine enrolling 250,000, one wonders what sort of men these million boys of ours are going to become if we quit our Red Cross and other relief work simply because the war is over.

On Decoration Day, when the War Camp Community Unit of the Harvard Club of New York City endeavored to close its doors, such a howl of protest was raised that in the name of humanity the Harvard Unit has been forced to continue on indefinitely. To many a boy this unit is the only home he knows. In its two years of service the tiny canteen, only one of many in New York City, has ministered to 248,000 men, and on some Sundays has fed 1,400. The boys like the place because they can be regular fellows, do as they please, and there is no religious element to annoy them. They get good home cooking at prices they can afford to pay, and all their worries, which to them seem as mountains, are untangled. They also get clean beds at moderate prices, and, therefore, do not have to seek cheap boarding houses of questionable character. But above all, it is a place to go to regularly instead of having to hang aimlessly around the streets. Furthermore, the canteen department of the unit is run by women of the world who can talk to a fellow in his own talk.

Relief During the War.

The New York County Chapter of the Red Cross, during the visit of the fleet to New York a short time ago, had to extend financial relief to nearly 5,000 sailors. The number assisted, outside of the hospitals, has been so large that count has been lost. At the present time, especially on Saturdays, there are more than 100 naval, army and merchant marine boys coming into the office daily, and men and women labor until 9 P. M., and Sundays as well, keeping up the morale of the well boy who is sadly out of luck in pay, has family worries, and what not. Looking ahead, it would seem as if the job were to be continuous.

But the big new problem is the merchant marine boy. In order to keep our new ships from rotting at their anchors because of the lack of men to man them, on June 2, 1919, Mr. Hurley, Chairman of the Shipping Board, issued an appeal to the country, saying:

The backbone of a merchant marine are the men who are in it. We must have the best obtainable crews for our new merchant ships. The need is pressing. American vessels in American ports today are calling for crews—for mates, engineers, seamen, firemen, cooks and stewards who are American citizens.

It is as vital to the nation's prosperity that we have efficient crews on the ships of the new merchant marine as it is for the railroads to have skilled and large train crews. Every American farmer, business man and manufacturer is directly interested in a business way in seeing that this is done.

It is his duty to help us secure efficient management at sea of the great fleet on which so much of the nation's money has been spent. It is the patriotic duty of every citizen not to forget the needs of the merchant marine, our third arm of service in peace or war. We have the ships; it depends on the people whether we have the men to run them as they should be run for the best interests of American business, first, last, and all the time.

That we have merchant ships in times of peace is as vital as our having them in times of war. For in eight months the United States is producing in manufactured articles, raw material and food supplies, enough to care for her home demand. In order to keep labor employed and prosperity in the land it is absolutely essential that we reach overseas markets, or otherwise we will be living off ourselves and not only marking time as to the net worth of the nation but deteriorating as well. To get these needed markets we must have American ships, for foreign maritime nations are not going to carry American goods to any extent in their ships to our customers who are likewise theirs.

Seamen's Institute.

We've got the ships now. How are we going to man them when, as things are at present, the American boy is not attracted to a seafaring career as proportionately as he should be. We certainly have failed to give proper attention to forming plans as to how to keep the boys at sea once they have been enticed away from the pleasures of life ashore. We seem to have lost sight of the fact that the welfare of a seaman in port is just as important as his welfare afloat. For hell, I recommend anybody to live on a ship alongside a dock while she discharges her cargo and ships another. I have spent many a night on vessels along the New York waterfront, and know how lonely officers and men get whose homes are inland or abroad. Having no club to go to—nothing but the overcrowded Seamen's Church Institute, mainly patronized by unclean foreigners—the temptation is great to drown one's sorrow at the corner saloon or seek the companionship of the woman of the streets, because there is nothing else to do. Certainly such a condition doesn't make for the efficient crews Mr. Hurley desires for American ships.

For many years the Seamen's Church Institute in New York City has served well to supply merchant sailors of the world with the club—the home they have lacked. Unfortunately, even now, before the new American merchant marine is half manned, the institute, large as it is, cannot begin to care for the situation—a situation which, in the matter of night lodgings alone, is going to be somewhat as follows, when the war organizations are closed up. The figures are on a yearly basis for New York City alone:

U. S. naval men	150,000
American merchant sailors	200,000
Foreign merchant sailors	150,000
Total	500,000

The institute in its dormitories and rooms can comfortably care for 189,000 men a year. During 1918, by giving up lounging and recreation rooms and turning them into dormitories, the institute slept 219,872 men under its roof, and over 100 men were turned away every night.

Who in New York is going to care for the other 281,000?

Regarding the great danger of our merchant marine falling from the failure of our boys to stick by the sea, Mr. McAdoo, formerly Secretary of the Treasury, has written me as follows:

I need not tell you how deeply interested I am in the welfare of our boys who are enlisting in the American merchant marine, or who are adopting seafaring careers. I earnestly hope that the effort you are making for the welfare and protection of these boys may succeed. I regard it as a public service of very great value.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, appreciates that without merchant marine boys we'll have no competent Naval Reserve trained in seamanship, and that, with War Camp Community houses and Red Cross canteens no longer in existence, even the regular navy will not be as attractive to the boys as it should be. Must we have strikes because we are forced to reduce our manufacturing production on account of the fact that there are no American ships to carry our goods overseas?

Where the Remedy Lies.

The remedy for the whole situation is for the Red Cross or War Camp Community to carry on in peace as in war and establish American seamen's homes in all big ports. Furthermore, there must be Seamen's Church Institutes established in all ports, to care solely for the foreigners. This organization always has done so, and therefore is best adapted for the work. In New York foreigners alone will test its capacity, and the religious element in the institute is needed by the uneducated foreigner, whereas the American boy wants to be left alone in this respect, or he'll not come around.

The problem in each port will be different. For instance, in New York there must be at least ten seamen's clubs along the miles of waterfront. In general each club would be like that of the Harvard Unit of the War Camp Community, affording sleeping accommodations as well. It would not be charity, for the boys wouldn't stand for that. They want to pay for what they get, yet, having little money, can't afford prices which would put these clubhouses on a paying basis. The Harvard Unit alone, I believe, goes into debt $15,000 a year. Yet that yearly debt has kept many a boy clean and efficient for Uncle Sam.

The baggage of a seaman when in port while waiting for a ship is a source of great annoyance and concern to him. Red Cross rest rooms at railroad stations or War Camp Community houses can relate tales of the tons of seabags and suitcases they have cared for, while the Seamen's Church Institute checked 51,679 pieces of baggage during 1918. As for the institute's mail department, it received 60,229 letters for sailors who were still at sea, yet who wanted to be sure of their mail on arrival in port. Letters play an important part in the efficiency of a man away from home. Ask the man who has been overseas during the war. The War Camp Community Houses solved this problem for naval boys, who had but to write to have their mail forwarded to such and such a place.

Needs of the Sailors.

The main problem for each of these community houses for merchant marine, army, and naval boys can be grouped as follows:

Meals and bed.
Banking.
Baggage.
Mail.
Recreation.
Temporary financial relief.
Temporary financial relief to families.
Hospital service.

This last has more to do with the merchant marine than any branch of the service, as the army and naval boy is taken care of by the Government and is still paid while sick. The merchant ship man has his hospital expenses cared for, but his pay ceases the moment he is put ashore from his ship. This works greater hardship on his family than on him.

Surgeon General Blue has recently asked the Red Cross to "carry on" in United States public hospitals, as it did in military hospitals, so a beginning has been made to care for this needed assistance. In 1918 Seamen's Church Institute visitors called on 8,217 merchant seamen in New York hospitals, and that number was but a small part of the total.

Such is the general outline of the problem facing the American Nation if it wishes to have a merchant marine and be prosperous. If our boys know that in all ports they can be made comfortable when ashore—that they need not starve while waiting for a ship—need not mix with the foreigners at Seamen's Church Institutes, then Mr. Hurley will have no difficulty in finding recruits for the merchant marine.

RADICALS DOWNED IN ARGENTINA

They Did Not Get Far with Their Troublemaking, but Their Loud Talk Caused Uneasiness

There has been a good deal of interest evinced in the subject of the spread of anarchy and Bolshevism in Buenos Aires. The ultra-radicals wanted May 1 to herald the dawn of the Social Revolution in South America. They made a lot of trouble, but not quite enough to suit them.

Copies of Buenos Aires newspapers just received tell about the May Day holiday. All labor laid down its tools and rested, but the holiday was in no way marked by riots or incendiary talk. The city authorities had taken precautions the day before, and the police made 800 arrests of persons who were avowedly anarchists. They also got some 1,600 names whose movements were watched thereafter.

The holiday was ushered in on the evening of April 30. The talk of the Reds of the city had served to awe the people into a state of expectation of dire things to come. The description in the Buenos Aires Herald includes the following:

"From midnight on the night of April 30, the movement commenced. At that hour the cafes and restaurants disgorged their clients, lottery shops, bootblacks and the hundred and one concerns which keep no hours tumbled down their shutters and told their customers that May Day had arrived. The usual night haunts, the cabarets and all-night cafes, closed down with the rest, the waiters and servants of such establishments clearing out with the customers, leaving their employers' premises with the day's grime for company. Outside these places, pickets, sent from the unions concerned, waited to see that none disobeyed the injunction and then departed, once their task was over. In newspaper offices the same tale was told. Linotype operators, machine men, porters, together with administration staffs, bade good-bye to their employers and joined the throng, their example being quickly followed by the writing staffs and indeed all concerned with the production of a newspaper. As soon as the theatre crowds came out of the amusement places they were shut down and locked. Theatres also took leave of their patrons for one day only.

"Previously in the day quite a stampede had occurred in the bakers' and provision shops, the rumor having gotten around that the January happenings would be repeated. For that reason everybody made haste to stock up his house with as much provisions as his funds would allow. * * *

"Early morning in the streets of Buenos Aires showed a weird state of affairs. All carts, cabs, and taxis had disappeared from the scene; a belated car rumbling along the thoroughfares, homeward bound, showing up the utter desolation all the more by its presence. No lights were visible, with the exception of the street lamps. A feeble moon only served to accentuate the utter loneliness of a city with 1,750,000 inhabitants, the majority of whom were safe at home. Hours before the time expected the trains stopped running, thousands of homegoers having to trudge to their dwellings on foot.

"The day dawned with a cloudy sky promising rain, a promise which was fulfilled in the afternoon when a liberal downpour effectually dampened the waning ardor of those who had determined to 'socialise.' In the centre the streets were filled with isolated groups, all converging to the meeting places laid down in the program, but no crowds were allowed to collect at other but these places, strong forces of police courteously but firmly inviting the loiterer to move on. * * *"

Meetings were held in the Plaza Lavalle and the Plaza del Congreso. They were orderly and quiet, the crowds dispersing in good order after the speakers were through. During the evening the people gathered in the streets, waiting for something to happen, but at last were forced by the rain to go home.

In commenting on the appearance of the city during the troubles one writer said:

"Much of the bedraggled aspect must be put down to the pacifist and leftist propagandists. Their name is legion, and their motive—well, the less said about them the better, for apparently they have none. If the proverbial dab ask what good or in that retirement sullen, or if old Brown of Wexford, now turning his back on the river to gaze at the anchors that an artiste (?) mind had placed to left and right of the statue in the Plaza Once, could view Young Argentina tackling the problems of the epoch, they might well exclaim, 'Why have we deserved this!'"

Playing a part in quelling and protecting the city is an organization called the Liga Patriotica Argentina, Dr. Manuel Carles, an eminent sociologist and economist, is its president. He says the purpose of the league is the maintenance of respect for Argentina by its belligerent natives and by mercenary foreigners. In an interview printed by the Herald he declared:

"For the genuine workmen we have nothing but respect; he, combined with the capital which has been lavished on this country, forms our principal asset. His aspirations are those of the intellectual Argentine. And although it may seem beside the point, yet his real welfare has been the motive-power in the formation of the Liga Patriotica Argentina. From the workmen's ranks we are going to eliminate the groups foreign in their thought; the Maximalists, Spartacists, Bolshevists, call them what you will, will be tracked down and combed out from among the genuine workers on whom they batten. We as Argentines have the welfare of the country at heart. We are willing and pleased to enjoy all the benefits which thousands of years of civilization and culture have enabled others to give us, but we are proud of being Argentines and hence we look with horror on the attempts which have been made recently to transform our country into a second Russia, and we shall use every effort to stamp them out.

"For the decent foreigner, our hearty thanks and our hand for the criminal who wishes to see this country put back in its orbit by the reprehensible methods, the flash, flaring words, but a drastic remedy is needed to cure the ills which have been brought here by malcontents from abroad. Unfortunately among our own people there are a few who have listened to these insidious teachings. They also will feel the weight of our displeasure. If they can be taught by easy methods, so much the better; if not we shall use the force which the threatened culture of our country entitles us to use."

During the afternoon of May 1 the Socialists in Buenos Aires held their annual parade. Committees representing the army, the navy, and the civilian mass met in the forenoon at different police stations in the city and announced upon the police Captains that they were expected to assist as riding. The presence of the uniformed body apparently was enough to frighten all trouble makers into keeping order.

NEW DRINK HOURS.

Parliament also has it difficult to find what constitutes the Fleet of July, and after long talks what comfort they can from the relaxation of legal restrictions on thirst-quenching in England. Under the caption, "More Time, But Little Whisky," The London Times says:

"The extension of hours during which intoxicating liquor may be sold came into effect yesterday, and licensed premises last night were open until 10 P. M. Full appreciation of the concession is deferred until supplies of beer and spirits improve. Many houses yesterday had no whisky at all, and long before 10 o'clock the chains of refreshment was limited to light beer or port wine.

"Under the new order public houses in rural districts are able to keep open to as late an hour at night as was customary before the war. While closing times in London used to be half an hour after midnight, and in other towns 11 P. M., village inns were shut by 10 o'clock. Any further extension of the evening hours of sale may for this reason be limited to the metropolitan area."

CADILLAC

WE would be a little less than human if we were not proud of the present status of the Cadillac.

The country's best citizenship frankly proclaims it the car of cars—the very best, and the most desirable, that human skill can build, or money can buy.

Men and women who are at the forefront of their communities, in culture, discrimination, and ability to choose the best, have entrenched it in a position of leadership, which admits of no question.

Putting this national and international preference on its lowest plane—trying to estimate the worth of Cadillac reputation in money—the imagination can not measure its value.

As we would be a little less than human if we did not prize this precious preference—

So we would be a little less than sane if we did not protect it.

Every consideration of common sense, and business acumen, and sentiment, requires that the Cadillac shall be made better, and better, and better, in the future, as it has been in the past.

We pledge you that this is the only sense in which the Cadillac will ever change—in a steady pressing forward toward higher and higher standards.

The Cadillac, whose excellence the whole world celebrates today, is the same Cadillac as the first of its type—refined with infinite patience, and unremitting zeal.

We promise you that the Cadillac of tomorrow, or a thousand tomorrows, hence, will still be the same splendid car, progressively improved—Cadillac in principle, Cadillac in high purpose, and Cadillac in performance.

CADILLAC MOTOR CAR COMPANY—DETROIT, MICH

Worn piston rings waste power and money

You can't afford to have them in your car. You want all the power your motor can develop. And who wants a wasteful motor when it can be prevented by installing the best piston rings?

McQuay-Norris Piston Rings increase motor power. Not in any mysterious, magical way—but because their exclusive two-piece design produces equal tension all around the cylinder walls—preventing gas from escaping. This insures full compression and consequent power.

That's why motorists for nine years have bought McQuay-Norris Piston Rings—for the sake of power and economy.

McQuay-Norris Piston Rings increase power, save fuel and decrease carbon. They are made in every size and over-size to fit every make and model of motor. They are obtainable anywhere—any time.

Your repair man can get you the proper sizes promptly from his jobber's complete stock.

Remember that they are the only piston rings of their kind. There is no such thing as a Leak-Proof type of piston ring. "Leak-Proof" is the trade-marked name of this particular ring. Be sure you get the genuine.

McQUAY-NORRIS MFG. CO., ST. LOUIS, U. S. A.

To Control Excess Oil
In some motors the flow of oil is so excessive that a special ring is required to control it.
McQUAY-NORRIS Supreme RINGS
used in the top groove of each piston correct this condition. Your repair man can get them for you.
In the lower grooves McQuay-Norris Piston Rings should always be used to obtain full compression and consequent power.

AUTHOR'S RECOGNITION IN MOVIES

Heretofore the Mere Writer of Books Has Been Treated as a Person of Small Importance, but Now—

BY RUPERT HUGHES.

THE moving-picture art is passing swiftly through all the stages that marked the history of all the other arts. It has condensed to a decade progress that took them centuries to achieve.

Fierce criticism and even contempt have been visited on motion-picture making for the inartistic quality of their work. Much of the contempt has been due to the cheap conservatism of slow-minded who hate anything new. Many, many pictures have been superb works of art, and unnumbered pictures have had splendid moments of extraordinary beauty. The time has now come for the motion picture as an institution to claim its rights and accept the responsibilities of a great art.

There was a time when writing of any kind was marvelous. The author, as an individual, was nothing. Authors used each other's ideas at will, and changed them at pleasure with no thought of dishonesty. Historians of the Bible text have made the impossibility of finding out just who wrote any of the books or who interpolated the countless changes. Printers developed schools and had assistants or pupils who helped the master with his canvases till men like Rubens ran rather factories than studios. Shakespeare used other people's plays, added to them or subtracted from them. His own texts are disputed.

Alexandre Dumas kept a sweatshop of fiction, and put his name to many books in which he wrote hardly a line.

The works of the great masters of literature were copied and scattered broadcast with no idea of a theft involved.

Architecture is to this day accepted as common property for anybody to adopt and adapt, and few people care to ask who designed any great building or who he borrowed his ideas.

Plagiarism has indeed been called a nineteenth-century crime. The motion-picture world has, until recently, fairly reveled with ruthless plagiarism. When it grew precarious to steal ideas, the managers began to buy them. But they had no more respect for the authors than the dealers had for the parents of their merchandise.

So we can all remember when it was exciting enough to watch a picture in which the hero opened a door slowly, passed into a room, took off his hat with expensive leisure, and squandered a new and beautiful smile on the heroine.

The first screen stories had to be short and very simple. As the mechanical drama improved, the spectators grew and began to demand novelty and variety to an appalling degree, till the industry, unknown a generation ago, became one of the leading industries of the world.

Gradually pictures were extended from one reel to seven, and on to serials as long as Chinese dramas. My wife and I wrote one serial scenario in forty reels. It took so long to make it that the star had time to have a child not included in the contract or the scenario. It was a beautiful child, but it exerted a disastrous influence on the story in which she was married until the last installment.

The authors we were treated with the utmost patience with which nice people treat children who should be seen briefly and listened to with amusement, but kept playing as soon as important business was to be discussed.

It was once the custom to treat authors and books as unimportant persons whose ideas did not amount to much, and whose practical intelligence was negligible. They were regarded as more or less valuable idiots to whom occasional quaint ideas were vouchsafed, but who were not to be consulted in the marketing of them.

For it was long the custom to treat rights as nuisances—they still are regarded by some managers, and by managers at times.

People should not have been surprised before that the authors of material for moving pictures should be looked on as quaint persons from whom one might steal or buy an occasional suggestion for a picture. But no one felt under any selfish or other obligation to let them hang around the studio and hear these mighty geniuses, the directors, or those humble clerks, the scenario writers.

The new art had a technique of its own, of course, and much mystery was made of it. Yet it did not really require extraordinary brains or education to master this technique. This was abundantly proved by the quality of many of the scenario editors, by the considerable salaries they drew, and by the pitiful work they turned out. Yet the author of a book or a play that had fed multitudes and earned fortunes was mysteriously supposed to be unable to contribute to the picturization of his material anything important enough to pay the time and trouble of listening to him.

Each firm had its scenario or continuity man, who took the material the manager bought and then whipped it into shape. The whipping was evident. The story was usually whipped till the life had run out and the shape was a ruin. There are only rules I have ever been able to see in the practice of this profession of mine. "Everything that is is wrong. Nothing as it stands. Change every detail of this picture but the title. Be thorough."

Then the scenario editor had turned the material inside out and finished his bloody work of camouflage, the director would take up the result and wreaked his fatal will on it, in an apparent frenzy to express his contempt for both the author and the scenario editor.

By this time the original author could hardly recognize a single feature of his own child or any article of its apparel, and perchance the director, who had never read the original, in his eagerness to outdo what he found in the scenario proposed to put back something that unintentionally resembled the original. But it was a sheer accident, and when the director found out that something like the original had crept into the picture he would rave and said, "Nobody is perfect, but the picture was made in a hurry." The dazed author could only wonder why the manager bought his work at all. Perhaps the dazed manager sometimes wondered. There was supposed to be a certain commercial value in a much advertised title, but since the vast majority of the patrons of the movies could never have heard of the original work, and since millions of them could not read English at all, this explanation was not very satisfactory.

I have myself received for several stories as high as $10,000 in cash and then been unable to recognize one entire incident, theme, or characterization.

The departure from the original began at the start. It discards or reverses the fundamental theme of the story. I have told stories made to preach the very opposite of what I tried to drive home. It is an absolute fact that I have almost never seen a single line of mine used as dialogue or explanation. This used to hurt my feelings a little—especially in view of the substitutes. Later I adopted the motto: "Blessed is he that expects nothing, for he shall get it."

As for the characters, they were rearranged altogether. In one of my novels a certain important character was presented as a pathetic little runt, with a dog-like devotion to his wife. The screen made him a powerful rake who flaunted his mistress all about town. In one of the scenes the poor wretch suffered the double misery of finding his faithless wife in her lover's arms and of having a revolver taken away from him. In the picture this character, finding his absolutely innocent wife in an absolutely innocent conversation with a man who had once cared for, proceeded to attack them both. He slashed his wife with a knife and fought the hero upstairs and downstairs till the bannisters were as completely wrecked as my novel.

My only consolation in this matter was the fact that the audience roared with laughter at the supposedly big scenes the inspired director had substituted for my poor stuff.

It began to dawn on movie managers that audiences were laughing or yawning at the artificial old strong scenes the directors were repeating to an insanity. Even the little boys and girls turned away when they spilled the automobile over the cliff or ran the train off the bridge into the river.

A hot roast beef sandwich is a fine thing now and then, but a diet made up exclusively of pepper and red meat leads one to cry aloud for a dish of tea, a bit of buttered toast or some peaches and cream.

Furthermore, a few directors were realizing this and gaining fame and money by turning out legitimate works of sincere humanity and irresistible art.

Many authors suffered agonies over what was done to their work, for to some authors their lines are sacred text. Mine are blacksmith's text. I worked too hard over them to have any illusions as to their sanctity or inspiration. They were written to be read in magazines and books, and I felt that, if a movie man wanted to buy the title as a point of departure for his own free flights in an alien field, I had no right to protest at anything he did, since I was unwilling to make the scenario myself and fight for points. I sometimes felt that his scenes and his lines were often less cinematic than my own would have been, but I never complained.

The only thing indeed that could have given me the right to demand my own way would have been a willingness to go to the studio and work out the continuity with the editor, labor over the cast with the manager, and then go out on the locations and sweat it out with the director in action.

Having only one lifetime, and that not long enough for my literary work, I gave this up as one more of the things I would do if I lived a thousand years, but could not indulge myself in with only the ordinary expectation of existence.

So I sold the moving-picture rights for as much money as the managers would pay and stayed away from the theatre where the mangled results were exhibited; or, if curiosity drew me to the slaughter, I went prepared to see something as remote as possible from my work.

Other authors were not so compliant as I. Instead of staying away from the sight of the screen productions or watching them with lofty disdain, they went to see them and came away howling bloody murder. They wrote articles and essays telling how inartistic the movies were. They did the art as much good as a man would who should go to the Rocky Mountains and ask them to remodel themselves to suit his ideal.

Some of the movie men invited the authors either to learn the trade and furnish their own continuities or to keep quiet. But most of the authors would do neither. In the meanwhile the moving-picture world began to resemble gold mining more and more. A stranger with a pick and shovel would unearth a million and sink it in the next hole. Fortunes were made with a rapidity only rivaled by the speed of their loss. The time had arrived when the moving-picture men could no longer juggle anything before their audiences and get away with it. Directors and scenario editors were going dry. Like the inhabitants of the desert isle who earned a precarious existence by taking in each other's washing, they began to grow lean on stealing each other's situations.

They grew desperate, like other Czars and Kaisers, and began to turn to the common people for help. They began to consider even the hideous humiliation of following the general outline of the stories they bought.

They saw authors going about the world taking stories from the inexhaustible wells of human experience and telling them to the public to the public's delight in its own portraits. They saw those authors doing so well at their homely trade that they could not be seduced into writing scenarios.

The directors, indeed, were gradually coming back to earth, whence all things take their strength, their meat and drink, and prosperity. People would no longer even look up at their acrobatics in the clouds. They noted especially the extraordinary success of one author who had been somehow impelled to take a hand in the moving-picture game and to force a recognition of the fact that at least one author had brains enough to direct his own scenario construction and the direction and marketing of pictures.

Rex Beach is an unusual author. In addition to his abilities as a writer of fiction, he had enjoyed a special training in the Klondike and other rough spots of the earth. It stood him in good stead now.

He liked to wrestle with walruses, to lasso polar bears and draw them closer to him. He went out before breakfast and took an avalanche on his broad shoulders instead of a shower bath. He could live for weeks on an ice floe eating snowballs and blubber.

He was uniquely qualified to explore the cinemarctic circle, to board the sessions in their studios, and to make the savage Eskimanagers listen to reason for their own good.

He told me once how a director tried to keep him even from witnessing the taking of the pictures for one of his novels. False appointments were made with him to go to one place while the picture was taken at another. Guards were actually placed at gates to keep him out. And all this after the manager had paid him a vast amount of money and promised him more. It was ridiculous, of course, for anybody to assume that so brilliant and so sensible a man as Rex Beach could have no value in the completion of a picture to be exhibited to the general public, and to find its success there. But that was his experience. He was not the man to accept such insolence tamely. He mastered the technique both of the art and the business. He became a partner in the enterprises, and shared the financial as well as the artistic responsibility. The result was extraordinary success.

Theatrical managers, as a rule, have preferred to have the author at hand, believing that the man who could construct a play good enough for an investment had brains enough to be of help in such changes as came to seem desirable at rehearsal.

But it has not been so with the moving-picture directors. They were pleasant enough people, but they had to be evolved. All new arts have to be shaken down gradually and all Governments begin as despotisms and develop slowly into constitutional monarchies and finally into democracies.

The moving-picture world is now ready for this last step. To Rex Beach is due not only the credit for asserting the right of the author to be heard, but of proving the value of his co-operation.

Having demonstrated his own ability as a collaborator throughout the production, he has urged the authors to adopt the principle of good golf: "Follow through."

It was not easy to persuade many of us. The returns from literary work were alluring and there was labor enough in that field.

Finally Mr. Beach offered his own personal guarantee that the author would be treated, not merely with patience, but with respect and cordiality. He has converted a very successful manager, Mr. Samuel Goldwyn, to the belief that the author's co-operation would be an asset and not altogether a liability.

This prospect has been made so inviting that it has wakened the dormant conscience in the breasts of authors; or it has even created one where it did not exist.

Mr. Beach and Mr. Goldwyn have persuaded some of us pen-people that it is a solemn duty to protect our children from massacre and indecent exposure before the enormous public that finds almost its only recreation in the moving-picture theatres.

It is my good fortune to be among those flattered by an invitation to enter this new fold. The inducements have been as generous as the hospitality.

What the result of this emancipation will be the future must reveal. One thing is certain: A great revolutionary step has been taken in the moving-picture domain. The author has at last won the franchise. It carries with it a heavy responsibility, but the opportunity is glorious.

WORK OF MERCY COMMITTEE

THE Mercy Committee of New Jersey recently celebrated its fourth birthday at the home of its President, Mrs. Charles Danforth Freeman, at Iselin, N. J. Five hundred members at that time viewed a tribute which also belonged to the committee itself, the Patriotic Service Medal recently awarded to Mrs. Freeman. The medal was presented to Mrs. Freeman by the Institute of Social Sciences as a tribute to the work of the Mercy Committee when it hurried to meet the needs arising from the TNT explosions at Morgan, N. J., last October.

The committee considers itself an arm of the Government in connection with the United States Army General Hospital No. 3 at Iselin. Prior to the entrance of the United States into the war the Mercy Committee had done as other committees for war relief have done loyally all over the land, namely, had knitted, sewed, and gathered funds for the desolate and afflicted in Europe. But with the appearance of khakied men in our own streets, with the word that they were entering the battlelines, the Mercy Committee began to form their plans for aiding the Government practically in its problems.

The organization tendered its services to the Governor of New Jersey, and followed this step by offering, through Mr. and Mrs. Freeman, the Freeman residence at Iselin as a hospital for wounded or convalescent army and navy men. The unit hospital, thus planned and accepted, was to have been under the direction of Major Fred H. Albee, since Chief Surgeon of Hospital No. 3.

It transpired, however, that after the army authorities had inspected the property they saw a larger utility for hospital purposes than the existing residence afforded. It was therefore arranged for the Government to take over a tract of land upon the Freeman estate at the nominal "rental" of $1 a year, and upon this ground the new general hospital was constructed, having a capacity of 1,800 beds.

One hundred and seventy of these beds were provided by the Mercy Committee branches, this being, so far as is known at present, the unique instance in which an organization has been accorded the privilege of so equipping a United States Army hospital. This equipment included the furnishing of every article needed from blankets, sheets, bathrobes, pajamas to spoons and forks, screens, towels, slippers, &c.

Since the establishment of the hospital the committee has become its main support outside of the actual necessities furnished by the Government. Fifty per cent. of all articles used in the hospital are furnished by the Mercy Committee. Magazines, crutch pads, games, puzzles, writing materials, fruit—all are included in the articles left daily at the hospital by the committee.

A small cottage was placed at the disposal of the committee by Mr. Freeman, who also bore the expense, some $2,000, for the building of an extension. The little resthouse was opened formally in July of last year, and served during its first month 150 meals. The second month saw this number increased by 600, and each month has so tested the endurance and capacity of the house and its volunteer workers that, in April last, a registry showed that 5,882 meals had been served during that month. Necessary additions consequently have been built, which include bed and bath rooms and increased dining room and kitchen space.

The Mercy House is supported practically by the contributions of the members of the committee, whose daily donations include pies, cakes, preserves, fresh eggs, fruit, and varieties of homemade and choice edibles. One great branch is the Motor Corps Auxiliary, composed of the New Jersey Division of the Motor Corps of America, who asked to serve as auxiliaries to the Mercy Committee, and have proved themselves invaluable members. Joining the Mercy Committee on Nov. 19 last, they have to their record an average traveling in its service of 850 miles a week. They have carried volunteer workers to and from Mercy House, and supplies for it which otherwise it must have gone without.

TWO FORCES AT WORK IN ITALY

Effect of Decisions at Paris on Events at Rome and Possibility of Renewal of Teutonic Influence

By WALTER LITTLEFIELD.

TO the Italian mind there is a direct relationship of cause and effect between American diplomacy operating at Paris and the passing of the Orlando-Sonnino Government last week in Rome. And without questioning the motives which inspired the cause or seeking to enshroud the effect with undue pessimism, it is my belief that while a more pliable Italian delegation at Paris may have been effected, there are unmistakable signs that this has been done at the expense of sentimental Italian friendship and of the threatened return of the peninsula to the dominating financial and commercial influences of Teutonic penetration.

Before describing the links in that chain of relationship between the cause at Paris and the effect at Rome, it may be just as well to explain the events in the Italian Chamber on June 19 as well as to demonstrate the political and social conditions which made those events possible—conditions which all through the war and during the armistice period have been responsible for the light in which Italy has appeared before the world. For it cannot be denied that that light has not been enviable.

On April 29 the Orlando Government received a vote of confidence in the Chamber—382 to 40, the only dissenting votes being those of the intransigeant Socialists led by Signor Turati. This vote, which received enthusiastic acclaim throughout Italy, was in answer to President Wilson's statement of April 24 in which he said that the Treaty of London signed by England, France, Russia, and Italy on April 26, 1915, and by the terms of which Italy entered the war, could not be considered operative at the conference and that the city of Fiume, which that instrument gave to Croatia, must go to Jugoslavia; the creation of which had been brought about by Serbia, and of which Croatia, like Slavonia, had become a part. Rightly or wrongly, the President's statement was considered in Italy as addressed to the Italian people over the heads of their Government—a challenge to that people to reveal their attitude. They revealed it.

Chamber Jeers Orlando.

Then on June 19 Orlando, not having been able to realize that mandate at Paris, again appeared before the Chamber and was defeated by a vote of 259 to 78. In asking that the Chamber be convened in secret session in order to listen to the story of his failure at Paris, he had declared that Italy must remain faithful to her allies, and had allowed the request for a secret session to be incorporated in a vote of confidence. It was in vain that he tried to have the Chamber see his point of view of necessity for separating the exigencies of internal needs from the foreign program. The Chamber replied with jeers to his plea for faith in the Allies, with cries of "traitors!" and, in an uproar, cast the fatal vote with a majority of 181.

On the surface it would appear that the Orlando Government had been defeated because it had failed to make the mandate given it on April 29 prevail at Paris, and that a new Government would be installed in an attempt to do what the late Government had failed to do. That was not the case, however. The new Government, headed by Francesco Nitti, if one may judge by former utterances of its members and by their political biographies, is not only ready to make concessions at Paris, but even at Berlin and Vienna. And a storm of alarm, of contempt, against the character of the Nitti slate was raised by patriotic societies throughout Northern Italy.

Now, while it is clear why the Chamber, which voted confidence on April 29, should, for the reasons indicated, withdraw that confidence on June 19, it is not clear to everybody why the Chamber should now support a Government which it knows to be opposed to doing the very things for which its predecessor was turned out for not doing.

Power Behind Deputies.

The reason is simple. In Italy deputies obey the orders of the Prefects of the Provinces, appointees of the Minister of the Interior, and not those of their constituents, and that these Prefects, with few exceptions, were left in office by Italy's "big boss" Giovanni Giolitti, when he retired from office, but not from politics, in the Spring of 1914, with no suspicion that war was so near. The whole political system over there is so Tammanyized that, with the Chamber of October, 1913, still seated, no subsequent Minister of the Interior has dared to discharge these appointees of the big boss. This accounts for the fact that all during the war, while the military authorities were summarily dealing out signal justice to the cases of treason which fell within their jurisdiction, the civil authorities dealt lightly with their cases, and turned their backs, in most instances, to Defeatist propaganda whether spread by the pro-Germans of Giolitti, the Socialists of Ferri, or the Clerical enemies of the Monarchy. It accounts for Caporetto. It accounts for Nitti. It accounts for the perpetuation of Giolitti.

Only once have the Deputies declined to do his bidding, only once did they ignore the orders given them by his Prefects. That was on May 19, 1915, when they gave permission to the Salandra Government to make war. Only a few days before, almost the identical men who last week overthrew the Orlando Government left their cards at Giolitti's house as a token of fealty, and demonstrations were started by certain Prefects in favor of the Giolittian policy, that the nation should remain neutral and gain from Austria what she could by threats and blackmail. But the Italian people would not have it so. Salandra, who had resigned, was reseated, it might almost be said by popular acclaim. The Chamber dared not oppose the people's will. So Italy went to war and Giolitti barely escaped with his life to his home in Turin.

Nitti's Manoeuvres.

And now the old crowd is back again, with Giolitti somewhere pulling the strings from the shadows, while this time the masses of Italy appear to be gesticulating and vociferating in vain at the betrayal. On two former occasions had Nitti tried to do by isolated policies what he has now achieved by combining them. In December, 1917, after the disaster of Caporetto, and when he had been Minister of the Treasury for only a few weeks, he allowed it to be known in diplomatic circles that he was ready to head a new Government which would make a separate peace with Austria-Hungary unless the Allies came to Italy's rescue. Again in January last he manoeuvred to place himself in power with a program which should make radical concessions to the opinion which was known to be established at the conference in regard to Italy's claims on the Adriatic. He failed and resigned, and on Jan. 12 the Orlando Ministry was reconstructed.

Nitti had believed that while winning approbation at Paris he could easily overcome opposition at home. The causes of his mistake are perfectly obvious to Italians. They are merely noted here because they have not been duly appreciated by foreigners and quite ignored in those diplomatic quarters where their signs should have been intelligently interpreted.

In the month previous Leonida Bissolati, Minister of Military Aid and War Pensions, had resigned after vainly attempting to have his colleagues adapt their policy to the opinion of the conference. He was a Parliamentary Socialist, and all through the war had kept his party lined up on the side of the Government. He believed that Fiume should be Italian, but that concessions should be made to the German population in the Northern Trentino, and that Dalmatia should be Jugoslav. On Jan. 4 he had a long interview with President Wilson at Rome.

Break with Government.

The result of that interview he imparted to Nitti, who at once allowed it to be known in the press—and in this he was aided by Giolitti's paper La Stampa of Turin—that he was no longer in accord with his colleagues in the Government. In Parliament he counted on Socialist backing, and outside, in case of a new election, on the newly formed Catholic Popular Party. He also trusted to the Giolittians in the Chamber to do the bidding of their master.

But Giolitti, as had happened in May, 1914, gave no sign. Now, as then, he was afraid of having the Chamber move contrary to overwhelming public opinion, for Bissolati had been hooted down in his speeches, and the reports of the Prefects showed that the prevailing opinion everywhere was that Orlando and Sonnino would win at Paris, unless, indeed, the Jugoslavs themselves should be admitted to the conference—a contingency not even imagined in Italy last January. So Nitti resigned and bided his time. Then last week his time came.

What had happened, meanwhile? What had made it possible for Giolitti to line up the old guard so that it not only overthrew the Government, which had brought the war to a victorious end in the field, but also establish a new Government seemingly opposed to public opinion?

The answer many Italians believe is to be found in American diplomacy as it is manipulated at Paris and in the ability of Giolitti to take advantage of the situation produced by that diplomacy in Italy.

Italy had entered the Peace Conference with a very simple proposition. She had the Treaty of London. She had the plebiscitum of the people of Fiume praying for union with Italy, declared on Oct. 30, 1918, a week before the Diaz armistice was signed. She was ready to make concessions in regard to the treaty, and, indeed, did make them. She arranged protocols with M. Venizelos in regard to the Dodecanesus Islands, and with Messrs. Lloyd George and Clemenceau in regard to Asia Minor. She was ready to debate with Serbia that part of the Adriatic question which concerned Serbia—not that which concerned Jugoslavia, for the latter then had no standing at the Peace Conference. Moreover, the Croats and Slovenes, whatever their protestations and ambitions for an independent Southern Slav State, were still, as long as the armistice lasted, the enemies, technically at least, of the allied and associated powers.

Recognition of Jugoslavia.

On Feb. 7 Mr. Lansing changed all that. In a dispatch to Dr. Trumbitch, Serbian Minister of Foreign Affairs and a Serbian delegate at the conference, the American Secretary of State declared that the United States therewith recognized "the union of the Serb, Croat, and Slovene peoples."

This gave Dr. Trumbitch a new mandate, that of Jugoslavia, and with it he pleaded its claims before the council. For reasons already indicated the Italian delegates did not appear to confront Dr. Trumbitch. They considered the procedure which made it possible for him to present the claims of two enemy peoples—the Croats and Slovenes—most irregular.

Thus began at Paris the long period of acrimony over the so-called Fiume problem. But in Jugoslavia itself the results produced by the Lansing note were quite as embarrassing for the Italian Government. Military passports were no longer recognised in Croatia, because it was said there that Croatia was no longer "enemy territory," to which alone the said passports gave access. At Belgrade Prince Borghese, the Italian Minister, was not recognised, because he was accredited to "the Royal Government of Serbia" and not to the "Monarchy of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, recognised by the United States of America." There were other complications arising from the same cause, which obstructed the work of the Italian army of occupation and dismayed and humiliated the Government at Rome.

Then, on April 24, President Wilson issued his famous statement. Although Orlando, in his reply, permitted himself to observe that it was an attempt to reach the Italian people over the heads of their Government—an altogether unusual proceeding in statesmanship—Italian publicists went further. They alleged that the document contained important conscious omissions and a perversion of facts. They noted that the President made no mention of the fact that Fiume, which he gave to Jugoslavia, had declared its Italian adhesion by plebiscitum—by self-determination—a week before the armistice, and had been asserting that adhesion by votes, demonstrations, and civic appeals to the conference ever since.

Another "Scrap of Paper."

They declared that the President had turned the Treaty of London into a "scrap of paper," on the ground that the nations which had entered the war after Italy had "no knowledge of that private understanding," and they pointed out that even before Italy entered the war the Italian press had repeatedly detailed the nation's aspirations, and that it was reasonable to suppose that she had made their accepted realization a quid pro quo for entering the war; some alleged that the United States Government had been fully informed in regard to the treaty; others, that this Government had pledged itself not to recognise Jugoslavia without the adhesion of Italy, Great Britain, and France to such a recognition.

Italians say that while the Lansing note destroyed the prestige of Italian diplomacy at the Peace Conference, the President's statement, in spite of the famous vote of April 29 condemning it, destroyed the prestige of the Government in Italy, and made possible a régime which may rule for a long time unless ended by popular demonstrations, as a similar one was ended in May, 1915, which characterised the peninsula's most humiliating days of the pre-war period.

For there is no doubt that the old gang of self-seeking politicians and pro-Germans is back in office, like locusts, after a five-years' enforced abstinence. There is Tittoni, who although a man of real distinction and of fame in economic and diplomatic circles, did not hesitate to accept office under Giolitti, in 1906. He now succeeds Baron Sidney Sonnino in the Foreign Office. There is Schanzer, a notorious Lieutenant of Giolitti, with the Treasury portfolio. The rest, with the exception of Admiral Sechi and General Albricci, are all men who disappeared from politics when Italy entered the war, save De Nava and De Vito, who held portfolios in the brief reactionary Boselli administration three years ago. There has been a clean sweep of the under secretaries, and men made efficient by the experience of the war have been turned out and replaced by waiting Giolittians.

While the nominal head of all, Francesco Nitti, a man of astonishing ability in constructive finance and industry, with the deadly gift of familiarity of a Mirabeau, as President of the Council, will direct the Ministers, and, as the holder of the portfolio of the Interior, the Prefects.

Meanwhile it may be asked why is it that Giolitti does not himself assume openly the power which he obviously employs in secret. The answer is partly to be found in the characteristics of the man and partly in the exigencies of the times. His four resignations from the Premiership reveal the fact, by the circumstances which attended his departures, that he has a penchant for governing from the outside. Moreover, although the Italian people may have forgotten the traffic in contracts and the Banca Romana scandals which formed part of the rule of Giolitti in the early nineties, they cannot so soon have forgotten the von Bülow-Giolitti correspondence of 1915, and the boss's flight to Turin.

PIGEONS FOR FOREST FIRE ALARM

Better Than Wireless for Communicating News About Outbreak of Flames

PIGEONS are now being used to prevent the spread of forest fires. Canada is taking steps to have the plan adopted throughout the country. The State of Minnesota, which, perhaps, suffers most, already has adopted it.

Philip E. Edelman, an electrical engineer now living in this city, thought of the scheme. A native of Minnesota, he appreciated to the fullest the need of some means to communicate rapidly the news of an outbreak of forest fire. His first idea was to erect wireless stations between the different forest outposts. The pigeon plan came as a discovery during a survey preliminary to installing the wireless.

"The lands which are subject to forest fires present two great difficulties for wireless communication," he said. "The first is the nature of the growth of forest. The trees rise up in close proximity. The difficulty of walking between them to erect the wireless apparatus is no small factor. Yet, it could be done. But there is always the danger that the machinery may be destroyed by the fall of one tree against another, or the destruction by fire of the tree bearing the radio apparatus. Then a wireless system needs constant supervision and constant examination.

"That brings us to another reason: The type of man living in the forest is not likely to know much about highly developed mechanical appliances. He is a rough and ready individual. I discovered, in trying to work out the wireless plan, that we couldn't get trained men to live at the isolated stations in the forests and on the outskirts of the forests.

"The thing to do then was to discover some means of communication which would function in the very thickest parts of the forests as well as be within the comprehension of the backwoodsmen. The use of pigeons is now highly developed. The plan is simple. What's more, it is practicable and far more reliable in its results than wireless communication.

"In all states and territories where there is a danger of forest fires the community maintains a system of forest policing. The work is done by men known as forest rangers. They have positions radiating from a central or main station. It is the duty of these men to make constant inspection of the territory under their control, usually in canoes. The drawback to this method is its slowness. A ranger may see the beginning of a fire which, if immediately reported, might be checked within a short time. The extent to which it is allowed to run depends on the rapidity with which he can get back to headquarters to send in the alarm. Very often two days are lost thus.

"Today, however, the ranger carries birds along with him in the duffle of his patrol canoe. As soon as he sees a fire he writes a message giving the location and extent of the fire and attaches it to the leg of the pigeon. The bird is trained to fly back to the main station. To insure the receipt of the note, a second message is sent ten minutes later.

"The rest is comparatively easy. The greatest difficulty in fighting forest fires has been the reporting of them and the checking of them before they reached unmanageable proportions. As far as is known, the pigeons give the best results in this emergency communication. According to the modern check system, they are 98 per cent. reliable.

"From the standpoint of cost the pigeons are cheaper than any mechanical apparatus. A carrier pigeon can be bought for $20 or $25. Its upkeep costs about two dollars a year. The men learn to handle them easily. There is no need of difficult training."

MEDIOCRITY THE KEYNOTE OF GERMANY'S NEW MINISTRY

First Account of Hermann Müller's Visit to Paris on Aug. 1, 1914, and His Adventures in Returning to Germany After Vain Efforts to Align French Socialists Against War Credits

Lieutenant Henry de Man of the Belgian Army, now in this country as a representative of the Belgian Ministry for Industry and Labor, is one of the leaders of the Belgian Labor Party. He spent several years in Germany as a student of the Social Democratic movement, and before the war was closely connected with its leading personalities. This is the first account published in this country of his journey to Paris on Aug. 1, 1914, with Hermann Mueller, the new Foreign Secretary of the German Republic, and of Mueller's effort to induce the French Socialists to vote against the war credits.

Mueller and Johannes Bell, Minister of Communications and Colonies, are the two Cabinet members who consented to become Germany's signers of the Peace Treaty—an honor which nearly everybody else in the Fatherland seemed anxious to dodge.

By HENRY DE MAN.

THERE is no better proof of the makeshift character of the new German Cabinet than the mediocrity of the personages who have accepted membership in it. Those who, like Scheidemann, estimate that their reputation as statesmen—with their own people, at least—is worth more than the satisfaction of retaining a portfolio a few weeks longer, have left the sinking ship. The others, who have shown themselves prepared to assume the responsibility of signing the Peace Treaty, are hopeless mediocrities.

This is especially true of the new representatives of the Majority Socialists—Müller and Schlicke. The only new man who is not frankly to be regarded as a figurehead is Dr. Eduard David, Minister of the Interior. It will be remembered that he retired from the original German delegation to the Peace Conference in favor of Herr Erzberger, allegedly on account of ill-health, but really because he was generally against any possible discussion of the return of Alsace-Lorraine to France.

David, Schlicke, Mueller.

Dr. David has more enemies in his own party, the Majority Social Democrats, than in any other political group in Germany. The main reason for his unpopularity is the fact that he has never been able to hide his burning ambition to play a leading rôle as a statesman. Even in August Bebel's lifetime he unsuccessfully competed with the "Old Lion" for the parliamentary leadership of the party. From what I know of him I suppose that his satisfaction of having got a portfolio at last is so great as to make him forget that this is but a meagre, and probably quite temporary, consolation for his failure as a peace plenipotentiary.

Hermann Müller, the new Foreign Secretary, and August Schlicke, the new Minister for Labor, have not hitherto been regarded as possible Ministers. The Fatherland must have been in dire need to drag them out of the obscurity in which they had so far performed their duties as bureaucrats of the party and labor union machine.

Herr Schlicke I have known for years as the President of the Socialist Metal Workers' Union of Germany. He confined himself to trade union activities and never played a prominent part in politics. He was known as the most despotic of all the trade union "bosses" of the Fatherland. His authority over the membership of his union, however, was not due to any particular talent as a tribune or a leader of men, for he is a poor speaker and anything but a striking personality. But he is a born bureaucrat, well trained in the routine of officialdom, and his position practically as a dictator of the Metallarbeiterverband resulted from the clever way in which he had centralised to the extreme the administrative powers of this national union. Its internal story is one long series of rebellions of local and district organizations against the autocratic rule of the Schlicke bureaucracy, but these rebellions were downed every time, thanks to the ruthlessness with which Schlicke and his assistants used the power they derived from the centralization of practically all the financial means of the national union in their hands. As a member of the executive of the International Metal Workers' Federation Herr Schlicke made himself equally unpopular with his foreign colleagues. Especially the French and the British found it hard to stand his overbearing attitude and the open fashion in which he showed his contempt for English and French nationality.

Mueller the Socialist.

Müller's personality is hardly any more remarkable than Schlicke's, but as a Foreign Secretary he deserves some more attention. He is also originally a working man, and it is obviously due to some mistake in cabling that he has been adorned with the title of Doctor, which he never possessed. He was born in the Southern Rhineland, in the neighborhood of Mannheim, and started his political career as a "radical," or "left wing" Socialist. He was an editor of a provincial Socialist daily of extreme tendencies when, shortly after the National Congress of Social Democracy in 1906, he was made a member of the National Executive (Parteivorstand) of the party. His election was considered a concession to the left wing of the party, which had been making some headway since 1905 and was complaining that the party executive needed some "young blood" infused, and that the radical element should be represented.

But the radicals soon found out that they had been deceived. As a party official Müller turned out to be a quite different person from the radical agitator he had been before he was invested with a share of responsibility in running the party machine. His former friends complained bitterly that, although a good deal younger than most of his colleagues of the Parteivorstand—he was not quite 40 then—he showed himself a born bureaucrat, and more of a reactionary and routine worshipper by temperament than any of the old "moderates."

His physical aspect is that of the typical Prussian petty official. A heavy, big frame, with the fatty flesh of the beer drinker—much of that pre-war flesh, however, seemed to have gone when I saw Müller in 1912, as I ran across him at Stockholm—a full, round, but yellowish face, almost hidden behind a pair of huge spectacles; and a somewhat schoolmasterly expression, more suggestive of pedantry than of any sense of humor. He is a poor speaker—good speakers are exceedingly rare in Germany—and his voice is slow and monotonous. With all that, he is a hard-working, serious fellow, who owes his comparative success more to the conscientious discharge of his duties as a party official than to any form of political virtuosity à la Scheidemann. From what I know of his character—and I have seen a good deal of him—I take it that he is not sufficiently blinded by ambition not to realise that he is more or less the victim of the shrewdness of his political friends, who apparently have succeeded in convincing him that it was part of his duties as a faithful servant of the party machine to assume functions which at this juncture mean nothing short of a political suicide to those who have accepted them.

The Paris Undertaking.

Now that Müller has unexpectedly come to the foreground, I should not be surprised to find that the European press will take up the subject of his journey to Paris on Aug. 1, 1914, about which very little has been made public so far. As I accompanied Müller on that eventful journey, which throws an exceedingly curious light on the policy of German Social Democracy on the eve of the war, I am in a position to give a full report of what really happened then.

Apparently Müller is predestined to be intrusted with other people's dirty jobs. At least, the mission which the executive of German Social Democracy gave him to fulfill just before the outbreak of the war deserves as much to be put under that heading as his present rôle as a registrar of surrender.

I was working at my office in the headquarters of the Belgian Labor Party, in Brussels—at the same time the headquarters of the "Internationale"—on the morning of Aug. 1, 1914, when I received a call from Camille Huysmans, Secretary of the International Socialist Bureau. He told me that Hermann Müller had arrived early that morning on his way to Paris, and that he (Huysmans) was going along to help him in his contemplated negotiations with the French Socialists, with a view to a common action against the menace of war. They both wanted me to join them. The three of us had a short conference and we left for Paris on the first train available.

As we arrived at the Gare du Nord about 5 P. M., we found that the general mobilization had just been declared in France. We went to the Chamber of Deputies, where most of the Socialist and labor leaders of the country were assembled. They immediately summoned a meeting in one of the committee rooms of the chamber. Our conference lasted two hours. After a short interruption for supper, it was resumed, this time at the office of the newspaper l'Humanité, and lasted till close to midnight. Then Müller and I hurried to the station to catch the last train which gave him a chance to leave France before all the Germans on French soil were interned. Huysmans stayed behind and returned to Brussels a few days later.

All through the proceedings I acted as interpreter between Müller—who knew but a very few words of French—and the French. The next day, as we were arrested and put under guard shortly before reaching the Franco-Belgian frontier, I destroyed the notes which I had kept, not that there was any reason to avoid lengthy investigations which might have prevented Müller from reaching Berlin in time to report on the result of his mission, which it was essential he should before Aug. 4, when the Reichstag was to meet. Soon afterward, however, I reconstructed an account of the main data of the proceedings, so that I am still able to furnish a report, the complete accuracy of which I can vouch for.

It had been decided that, should any considerable delay on Müller's return journey appear probable, I was to try to reach Berlin by a different route, if necessary via Switzerland, so that there would be two chances instead of one of reporting to Berlin in time. I am glad this proved unnecessary, for then I should probably have spent the duration of the war in a German internment camp. Fortunately, once we had got into Belgium—on the afternoon of Aug. 2—it appeared that Müller would be back in Berlin on the evening of Aug. 3, which he eventually did, so that he was able to give a full report before the memorable sitting of the Social Democratic members of the Reichstag that preceded the voting of the war credits on Aug. 4.

Adolph Bauer, Chancellor. Hermann Mueller, Foreign Minister. Eduard David, Minister of Interior.

THREE CHIEF MEMBERS OF THE GERMAN CABINET.

Frenchmen, Though Socialists.

Müller, who was most cordially received by the French Socialist Deputies in Paris, began by stating the nature of his mission. The executive of German Social Democracy, he said, had sent him to make a last attempt to prevent the war by deciding on a common course of action of the French and German Socialists. He had no authority to pledge his party to any definite course, as the exact circumstances at the time of the prospective meeting of the Reichstag could not yet be foreseen, but he was authorized to explain the situation and his party's views at the time when he had left Berlin, (on July 31.) In the light of this information, he said, the French Socialists might find it easier to determine their own attitude, should the question of the vote of the war credits be put to them. He would take back to Berlin the information which they would give him. This exchange of information would, he hoped, facilitate the choice of a common policy aiming at the prevention of the war.

He then gave a rather optimistic account of the state of affairs in Germany. He said he knew nothing about a general mobilization of the German Army, the rumor of which had been spread in Paris that morning. He admitted that since the day before, when he had left home, something of the sort might have taken place, but then it might have been merely a local mobilization which had given rise to exaggerated rumors. The "state of danger of war," (Kriegsgefahrzustand,) which had been declared on July 31, he called a comparatively harmless measure, quite different in its meaning from mobilization proper. As Herr Haase had done at the meeting of the International Socialist Bureau in Brussels four days earlier, he laid much stress on what he called the underhand encouragement given by the Imperial Chancellor to the anti-war demonstrations and on the alleged desire of the Kaiser to maintain peace.

As to the Social Democratic Party, Müller said, it would on no account vote in favor of any war credits. "Dass man für die Kriegskredite stimmt, das halte ich für ausgeschlossen," was his definite, repeated statement. A fraction—probably a small minority—might favor abstention from voting, with a view to the danger from Russia, but Müller declared that he himself did not share the latter view and that he thought a unanimous vote against the war credits probable, especially if the French Socialists decided to follow a similar course.

What Mueller Learned.

Discussion made it appear that the French showed little inclination to follow this suggestion. Müller got plenty of evidence—notably from Marcel Sembat and Pierre Renaudel—that the earnest desire of the French Government to maintain peace and, should France be attacked, to remain on the defensive, was above suspicion. Reference was made to the decision of the Viviani Cabinet to withdraw all French troops within ten kilometres from the frontier, so as to avoid provocations and clearly demonstrate France's good will. Müller was also told of the repeated attempts of the French Government to induce Russia to a similar policy of moderation, attempts in which Jean Jaurès, who had been assassinated the night before, had taken a leading part until a few minutes before his death. Under these circumstances the majority of the French Socialists would not refuse the war credits which the Government would need should France be attacked. A minority seemed to favor abstention, as a means to demonstrate that the Socialist Party refused any responsibility for the consequences of a system of international competitive armament which it had always opposed.

A lengthy discussion followed, in which Müller repeatedly insisted on the desirability of a common policy. His main argument was the view which had always been advocated by August Bebel, that the distinction between the attacking power and the attacked was obsolete. The history of all modern wars, he said, showed that they were due to general causes inherent to the economic development of capitalism in its imperialistic stage, and that it was usually impossible to know the truth about the actual incidents that led to the declaration of war until it was all over. (This argument, by the way, was repeated by Hermann Müller at the International Socialist Conference in Berne in February last, to justify his party's refusal to admit Germany's guilt as the attacking power.) Consequently, he could see no reason why the attitude of the French Socialists should be different from that of their German comrades.

No formal decision was arrived at, but the "information" Müller had to take home was to the effect that the French Socialists were not to be induced to refuse their Government the war credits, and that the only chance of a possible common policy consisted in abstention from voting on both sides.

Held Up at the Border.

Müller and I left Paris with a slow night train crowded with Germans who were hurriedly trying to get out of France. Thanks to the intervention of Deputy Marcel Cachin with the station master, we got the sixteenth and seventeenth places in a compartment that was supposed to accommodate eight persons. It was an awful journey, during what was probably the hottest and closest night of that Summer. In almost every station the train was formally besieged by people—mostly Germans—who had to be kept out with the help of the naked fist. The passengers smashed all the windows to get a little more air.

In Maubeuge, the last French town, it seemed as though it had all been in vain. The station was occupied by troops which stopped the train and put all the Germans and Austrians under guard. But I stuck to Müller and managed to get him into the station restaurant, from which we escaped through a back door. For twenty minutes we walked briskly towards the Belgian frontier. Then we were again arrested, and the gendarmes took us to the police station at Maubeuge. To get in, we had to make our way through a crowd of waiting reservists, who had no trouble in discerning that Müller was a German and demonstrated their affection by hooting first, and by pushing and kicking rather ungently afterwards. I got my share of these attentions, but the prospective Foreign Secretary of the German Republic by the grace of Foch got most of it. As soon as we were inside the station, I began to kick up a regular latin row about the disgraceful fashion in which a friendly Belgian citizen had been ill-treated, and soon succeeding in seeing the boss of the establishment himself, on whom I inflicted such a daring speech that he was apparently glad to get rid of us by handing us over to two heavily armed gendarmes with the order to get us across the Belgian border immediately. As soon as we were out on the country road our escort seemed to find the walking too hot and let us do the few miles of hiking alone. In Mons we found a train and that same afternoon I put Müller on the Berlin express in Brussels—two hours before the handing of the German ultimatum to Belgium. As we shook hands in parting, the last connecting link between the Socialists of the two groups of powers was broken.

Not a German Trick.

In the light of subsequent events, Müller's mission to Paris appeared to some French Socialists, who had never entertained any doubt about the honesty of his purpose, while he was among them, as part of a crooked machination of the German Socialists, in alliance with their Kaiser's Government, to unnerve France's resistance by inducing the French Socialists, under false pretences, to hamper their Government's action for national defense. I owe it to fairness to say that I am unshakably convinced that in spite of appearances, there never was any foul play intended.

I may err in my belief that Müller was too honest to have lent himself to such a disgraceful game. But then there is objective evidence enough to show that until July 31, or up to the time when Müller left Berlin, the attitude of the majority of the German Social Democrats did indeed correspond to the picture Müller gave of it in Paris. The change that resulted in the betrayal of Social Democracy's pledges of international solidarity by the vote of the war credits in the Reichstag on Aug. 4, 1914, occurred while Müller was on his way. But then I think that one may admit that not every German is necessarily a base scoundrel, without being open to the suspicion of seeking excuses for the attitude of Germany at large, or even of the German Social Democracy in particular.

What was the matter with Germany was something far worse than the wickedness of individuals. It is the movement as a whole which is to be made responsible for what happened on Aug. 4 and thereafter, and my judgment of it would be more lenient than it now is were I to admit that it has been the victim of treason by its leaders.

But all the same—don't you think that Foreign Secretary Hermann Müller has started his career as a diplomat under a rather unlucky star?

TWENTY-THREE WARS AT THE SAME TIME

With the Biggest Ended, There Are Still Scattered Clashes Remaining to be Stopped Before the World Returns to a Peaceful Status

ANDREW BONAR LAW, speaking in the British House of Commons before the signing of peace, quoted the Chief of the British Staff as authority for the assertion that twenty-three different wars were still in progress. That was about a fortnight ago.

When the statement was cabled to this country, inquiry was made in Washington to locate the twenty-three wars and obtain information as to the causes at issue and the opposing forces. By "war" in this connection is meant the clash of forces where nationalistic claims are involved. The Great War, just ended, is counted on the list as only one struggle, although it had many sides and was fought on many fronts.

1. Great War: Allied Powers versus Central Powers.

Peace conditions already accepted by Germany and have been presented to Austria. The conditions for Turkey, Bulgaria, and Hungary are in course of preparation by the representatives of the Allied Powers.

2. Jugoslavia versus Austria.

Cause: Dispute over the future boundary between Austria and the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes. The battleline extends from Predil Pass to the Drave and follows this river to the Hungarian border.

3. Rumania versus Hungary and Bolsheviki.

Causes: (a) The refusal of Hungary to accept the decision of the Peace Conference as to the boundary of Rumania, (b) the Hungarian-Bolshevist menace. The battleline extends along the Tisza River from Csap in the north to the vicinity of Szegedin in the south.

4. Poland versus Ukrainia.

Ukrainia, including Galicia, was a part of a former Polish State. Now the Poles claim that part of this territory in their republic. They have occupied the Province of Galicia by force.

5. Letts and Balts versus Bolsheviki.

The Letts and Balts wish to form a separate republic. The Bolsheviki at first tried to persuade them to join Soviet Russia, but, failing in this, have tried to take the provinces of Livonia and Courland by force.

Zones of the Twenty-three Wars.

6. Esthonians versus Bolsheviki.

The Esthonians wish to form a separate republic with their own Government. The Soviet Government, failing to persuade them to join a United Soviet Russia, is trying to conquer the country by force of arms.

7. Denikin versus Bolsheviki.

General Denikin, a leader in the old Russian régime, formed an army of Russian soldiers and opposed Bolshevism in the south of Russia. At present his forces have been greatly increased by volunteers and are known as "The Volunteer Army." He occupies the territory including the valleys of the Don and Donetz Rivers, and has made considerable advances in this territory.

8. Finns versus Russian Bolsheviki.

The war between Finland and Bolshevist Russia was caused by the fact that the Bolsheviki persecuted the Finnish inhabitants of Karelia. A volunteer army of 10,000 men was raised in Finland and sent to assit the Karelians. This army was quite successful, but has recently been suffering reverses, being greatly outnumbered by the Bolshevist forces. The Finnish and Soviet Governments have become strained through the situation in Karelia, and at present a state of war exists between Finland and Soviet Russia.

9. Allies versus Bolsheviki.

The allied troops were sent to Northern Russia to protect supplies sent there by them to be used by the Russian forces against the Germans. The Russians were not able to protect these stores, and there was danger of the Germans gaining the port of Archangel through Finland and procuring the equipment. The Kerensky Government was overthrown by the Bolsheviki, who considered the Allies as enemies and attacked their forces, hoping to gain the port of Archangel. At present the Allies are withdrawing some of their troops and turning the situation over to the loyal Russian forces.

10. Kolchak versus Bolsheviki.

Forces under Admiral Kolchak are the representatives of a conservative element. His officers include some of the old Russian Army. He is fighting against the Bolsheviki for a united Russia and Siberia.

11. Persia versus Kurds.

The Kurds on both sides of the Turkish-Persian border, from Diarbeker to Tabria, are fighting for independence.

12. Germans versus Bolsheviki.

Under the terms of the armistice of Nov. 11, 1918, several German divisions under the command of von der Goltz remained in occupation of the Baltic provinces to prevent the westward spread of Bolshevism. The line extended last week approximately from Riga to Kovno and thence southwest to the East Prussian border.

13. Cossacks versus Bolsheviki.

14. Afghans versus British.

The British hold the territory in the vicinity of Thal and in the Tochi Valley. They sent armistice terms to the Amir, who replied in rather high-flown language, protesting the impracticability of the terms, but agreeing to meet in conference.

15. Siberians versus Bolsheviki.

The Eastern Siberians under Semenoff for a long time did not recognize the Kolchak Government, and they have carried on a war in their own behalf against the Bolsheviki in Eastern Siberia. It really has amounted to a form of guerrilla warfare.

16. Egyptians versus British.

The disorders in Egypt are gradually being quelled. In upper Egypt alone 19,000 arms have been collected since March 11, 1919.

17. Nicaragua versus Costa Rica.

Nicaraguan and Costa Rican rebels formed an expedition on the southern shores of Lake Nicaragua for the invasion of Costa Rica, but the expedition was a failure. President Tinoco's forces met them before they had advanced far into Costa Rica and drove them back. They withdrew and crossed over to an island in Lake Nicaragua.

18. Mexican Troubles.

"Routine hostilities" have continued in Mexico since the Villa crowd's flight from Juarez, when American troops crossed the border to stop firing into United States territory. The economic conditions in Mexico are, as usual, strained, and much pressure from other nations in behalf of their ill-treated citizens is threatened now that the Great War has ended in Europe.

19. Irish versus British.

The Sinn Feiners recently attempted to form an Irish republic, but of course England has refused to recognize them.

20. Hedjas versus Bedouins.

The forces of Emir Abdullah recently suffered a grave defeat, the Wahabis attacking and capturing Kurma, east of Mecca. Ibn Savond is believed to be working in harmony with the Wahabis. A squadron of the Royal Air Force was ordered recently to go to the assistance of King Hussin.

21. Chinese Revolution.

The Southern Government, representing the greater part of the Provinces of Fukien, Hunan, Szechuan, Kuangtung, Kuangsi, Kweichow, Yunnan, and Szechuen, is fighting against the Peking Government for the reinstatement of the 1913 Parliament and the transfer of the capital of the empire to Hankow. The armed forces of both Governments lack leadership and organization. Most of the fighting is on the general line of the Yang-tse-Kiang River.

22. Czechs versus Hungary.

The future boundaries between the two States and the fear of Bolshevism on the part of the Czechs are the causes of the conflict. The battleline is subject to rapid changes, because, considering the length of the line, the forces engaged are comparatively small. It extends from the north of Eperjes in a southwesterly direction to the vicinity of Pressburg and the Austro-Hungarian border.

23. Poland versus Bolsheviki.

The Polish forces in this conflict form a rampart against the westerly progress of the Bolshevist armies. The line extends through Kovno, Vilna, Pinsk, and Sarny to Stanislau.

COL. WOODS'S NINE POINTS

Assistant to Secretary of War Presents His Reasons for Giving Jobs to Soldiers

By ARTHUR WOODS,
Assistant to the Secretary of War.

THE present lull in our industries was caused by the readjustment pressaging the period of reconstruction which our country is now facing. Our industries, once shaped back to a peace basis, will be called upon to produce in greater quantities than they ever have. Every machine in the land will have to be run to its full capacity to help restore the world to a peace basis. Our industrial army will have to be greater than our war army was, to help secure the peace which we wrested from a war-mad enemy.

Roughly speaking, there are about 20,000,000 wage-earners in the United States, and out of this number 4,000,000, one-fifth, were taken out and mobilized for the different branches of our army. This army is now being demobilized at the rate of 10,000 a day, and they must be reabsorbed by our different industries.

1. Because he is an ex-soldier. He was loyal to us in war times. We should be loyal to him during the peace times he has won for us.

2. Because he is physically a better man. Life in the army has hardened his muscles and given them endurance.

3. Because he is a 100 per cent. man he will give you a 100 per cent. service. Efficiency will be the greatest asset in our coming industrial life. Every man and every machine will have to work at 100 per cent. capacity. Two hundred million days a year are lost to our industries through sickness alone. The returning soldiers are the cream of the health of our nation.

4. Because many of the skilled men that entered our army were put to work, each at his particular trade, and have developed their skill to the highest efficiency.

5. Because the ex-service man has learned to obey. And because to obey orders has become second nature with him he will perform his work to the best of his ability without grumbling.

6. Because he is mentally a better man. No man could have gone through what our doughboys went through without becoming a better man. Remember that they have faced death. The long marches have taken out the shiftlessness of youth. Every ex-service man is a steady man.

7. Because you must help the ex-service man restore himself financially. He must not be allowed to feel that you are not doing unto him as he did unto you. Practically each one of them has to start life anew, financially.

8. Because work for our ex-soldiers means industrial peace to our country.

9. Because every ex-service man is a man, a full sized, red blooded, two fisted man, a real American.

SUMMER IN THE PLAYHOUSES---MUSIC AND FILMS

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

FIFTEEN attractions dared to go into July on Broadway a season ago, and this year the number will be twenty-four. The time has already come when it is almost impossible to tell when one theatrical season ends and another begins—shall "At 9:45," which opened at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre last night, be classified as of the old season or of the new? Still another play, non-musical, probably will come to town on July 7; whether it does or not, however, there is no doubt that each successive Summer marks a shortening of the interseasonal period, and that the passing of a few years will see it obliterated entirely.

Of the twenty-four offerings which will be holding the boards Wednesday night—the number is exclusive of the two midnight roof shows—fifteen will be of a musical nature. This, however, is a proportion to be expected; probably the most remarkable thing about the character of the Summer entertainment, on the other hand, is that one of the plays which run on ("John Ferguson") is a stark tragedy, unrelieved by humor and making not even the fraction of a concession to what is generally regarded as the Broadway Summer taste.

It is true that . large majority of the existing attractions are supported in part by the kindly offices of the cut-rate ticket man, but since that philanthropist operated in previous Summers also the explanation of the phenomenon must be sought elsewhere. It is to be found, according to the best opinion, in the visitor within our gates, who is more numerous than usual this Summer; in the kindness of the temperature in remaining below ninety, and, finally, in the simple fact that the theatrical times are changing.

The reference above to an early July première is to that of "Welcome Home," a comedy by Guy Bolton and Frank Mandel, which probably will be seen at the Lyric Theatre on or about July 7. In this instance the early opening is said to be contemplated because of the nature of the play. It has to do with the returned soldier, and there are said to be several other works of similar idea—or, at least, theme—on the way.

The gossip of the avenue is that "Welcome, Stranger," when it is revealed here in the early Autumn, will be in large measure the work of George M. Cohan. The piece, in its original form, was a farce by Aaron Hoffman, and was played out of town by Cohan & Harris a month ago. Mr. Cohan, according to the report, had sufficient faith in the play's central idea to undertake the complete making over of the play. It is not yet known whether or not his name will appear on the revised opus.

Revision being the theme, F. G. Wodehouse has been engaged to make over "Among the Girls," a musical comedy derived from Roi Cooper Megrue's "Seven Chances." "Among the Girls" was recently played in Boston with indifferent results, but the feeling that it contained a good idea prompted the Selwyns to seek a new adapter. The result will be revealed in these parts in the Fall.

The world has again been made safe for the "Follies," seemingly, for the 1919 number of that perennial attracted some $30,000 to the box-office in its first week at the New Amsterdam. It achieved the distinction of selling standing room at the Wednesday matinee—a traditionally difficult trick for a musical comedy.

Mr. Tyler failed to find Washington weather conducive to playgoing during the month of June, and accordingly curtailed his purposed five weeks of try-outs in that city. Three plays were tried out in as many weeks—"Made of Money," "On the Hiring Line," and "A Young Man's Fancy." Booth Tarkington's "Clarence," which was to have been the fourth, will be produced instead in Atlantic City on July 7.

David Belasco produced Avery Hopwood's comedy, "The Gold Diggers," in Atlantic City during the past week, and it will almost unquestionably be the Fall offering at the Belasco Theatre, following the second engagement of "Dark Rosaleen." "The Gold Diggers" has Ina Claire in the principal rôle, and is concerned with the life of the chorus girl, real and supposed.

And now a pair of Clyde Fitch's comedies are in a fair way to become musical comedies, with more, presumably, to come. A musical version of "Girls" will be shown here in the early Autumn, probably with Nan Halperin in the leading rôle, and a little later "The Blue Mouse" will be made over.

The Theatre Guild, flushed with its success with "John Ferguson," promises a thirty-five-week season next year, with five popular programs and a single production for subscribers only. The month of October will mark the beginning.

H. Austin Adams, who caused some discussion by contributing the play entitled "'Ception Shoals" to the ensemble of several seasons ago, is about to be heard from again. Dr. Adams's newest work bears the title "Curiosity," and will presently be tried out with a view to metropolitan production in the Fall.

Frances Starr is said to be planning to commit to memory two Shakespearean rôles during the Summer months—and presumably Viola is one of them. Mr. Belasco, it thus appears, is still planning to make one or two Shakespearean productions, although they probably are still several seasons distant.

THE STORY OF EDDIE CANTOR

THE success which has attended the efforts of Eddie Cantor in the last three numbers of the "Follies" has brought him to a point of recognition equal to that enjoyed by any other low comedian of the hour. Just as the "Follies" are "a national institution," so the performer who scores a success therein becomes something of the sort also.

Eddie Cantor is still under 30, and is an east side youth whose stage début was made quite by chance. The playgoer, and particularly the vaudeville fan, who can carry his memory back nine or ten years, will remember the team of Bedini and Arthur—Jean Bedini and Roy Arthur—and the burlesques which the pair were accustomed to perform at Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre.

Arthur, who hailed from the east side, was in the habit of visiting his old haunts from time to time, on which occasions, of course, he did not omit mention of the successful run which he and Bedini were enjoying at Hammerstein's. Cantor, at the time, was a youth of 18 or 19—running wild on the east side, and with no thought in the world of taking up anything so irksome as work. Arthur invited him to pay a visit to Hammerstein's, and it was while in the Bedini-Arthur dressing room that young Cantor received an offer from Bedini to "go on" the following week.

Cantor, of course, accepted, solely because he had nothing else to do. The regular offering of Bedini and Arthur was a juggling turn of comedy leanings, in which Bedini, in white face, did the juggling, and Arthur, in blackface, attended to the comedy. This turn had become so well-known at Hammerstein's, however, that the team had abandoned it in favor of a series of burlesques of contemporaneous plays and players. During the week following a burlesque of "Paris by Night" was to be the program, and Cantor's bit was that of a Frenchman.

Cantor, possessed even then of the comedian's instincts, won his measure of laughs, and Bedini rewarded him at the week-end with $30 and an offer to continue with the act. He played various small roles in the burlesques which followed. When the combination went out on the vaudeville circuit the blackface juggling turn was resumed, and it was then that Cantor was forced into burnt cork. He put it on much against his will (Bedini insisted that he must be the only "straight" man in the act,) and circumstances have compelled him to black up ever since. A year ago, in the aviation scene in the "Follies," he appeared again in white face, and this season he has but a single "Follies" scene in which he is required to don the cork. Some day, he promises he will get away from it entirely; a motion picture company has already offered to present him in the films in white face.

Shortly after the Bedini-Arthur turn left Hammerstein's it played a week at the Colonial, where the sequence of acts compelled a "close in one"—the same being vaudeville parlance for a shallow scene in front of the drop curtain, so that the stage may be set for the succeeding act. Cantor, who had long been anxious to try his luck alone, was left to handle the final scene with a few songs, and did so well that Bedini advanced his weekly wage from $30 to $40.

He continued for a season or more with Bedini, breaking loose only when the latter wanted him to join a burlesque organization. (Bedini is now a successful writer and producer of burlesque shows, and is responsible for "Peek-a-Boo," the current Columbia entertainment.) Cantor thereupon joined one of Gus Edwards's kid revues, playing a blackface butler, for Edwards had seen him in blackface with the previous act and would have nothing else.

While the Edwards act was at the Palace Cantor was spotted by Max Hart, a vaudeville agent shrewd enough to recognize possibilities in the slim youth in blackface. Hart undertook his management, and at once withdrew him from the Edwards act, urging him at the same time to go to Europe and branch out as a "single." Cantor accordingly went to the Alhambra in London, but his reputation as a blackface artist had preceded him, and again he found it necessary to black up. He remained abroad for some months, then returned with the idea of joining one Al Lee in a vaudeville act.

Cantor's intention was to try a Jewish comedy rôle in this act, and rehearsals were well under way when the powers of the booking office learned of it and put down a collective foot. Cantor, they insisted, was a blackface comedian, and must appear in blackface; otherwise the act would not be booked. Accordingly Cantor once more donned the burnt cork and bided his time.

Next came an offer from Oliver Morosco to play a blackface chauffeur in "Canary Cottage," about to be produced in Los Angeles, and to Los Angeles went Cantor. He played the rôle, but before the piece was brought to New York Cantor became homesick—he had married in the interim, and his family was in New York—and the result was a wire to Max Hart urging the latter to get him an immediate New York engagement—of any kind.

This wire of Cantor's brought about the beginning of his alliance with Florenz Ziegfeld and the "Follies"; had he been content with Los Angeles it is unlikely that he would be in the "Follies" today. Hart arranged for Cantor to make a single appearance in the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic, but wisely refrained from telling the comedian that he was merely being tried out. Cantor made his appearance on the roof under the impression that he had been signed by Ziegfeld for a year, and accordingly went about his work with a confidence which probably would not have been his had he known that he was on trial. The next day, after Ziegfeld had expressed approval, Hart told Cantor the truth.

As the Constitution follows the flag, so the "Follies" follows the "Frolic." Cantor went from the roof into "The Follies of 1917," and apparently is now a fixture in the series.

MORE OF NEXT SEASON'S PLAYS

NO inconsiderable portion of the new season's entertainment, if the advance announcements are to be believed, will come from the laboratory of Oliver Morosco. Mr. Morosco will have some three or four New York playhouses, as well as divers theatres throughout the country, in which to house his various productions.

The Little Theatre, when it is ready, will be reopened by Mr. Morosco with "Seven Miles to Arden," the same being a dramatization of a novel by Ruth Sawyer, the adapter being Anna Nichols. "Love Time in Picardy," by William Addison Lathrop and Wilfred North, is Mr. Lathrop's novel made over—and a war romance, seemingly. It will reach New York late in September. "Cap'n Warren's Wards," taken by the Hattons from Joseph Lincoln's novel, drops from the star class, in which it was lately placed in these columns, by reason of Mr. Wise's alignment with the Woods forces.

"A Regular Girl" is a comedy which S. Jay Kaufman will contribute to the Morosco collection, with the strong probability that it will be used as a vehicle for a well-known star. Leo Carrillo, when he finishes with "Lombardi, Ltd.," will come to town in "The Bread Line," written by Mr. Morosco. Still another dramatization of a novel will be "Slippy McGee," made by Edward F. Rose from the story by Marie Conway Oemler. And there will be "Married in Triplicate," a farce by Anna Nichols, as well as some half a dozen others already listed.

John D. Williams has announced a pair of plays, one of which is of more than usual interest. It is the joint work of Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson, the fruit of whose first collaboration was "The Man from Home," and it will be entitled "Up from Nowhere." It deals, indirectly at least, with Bolshevism. Norman Trevor will have the leading rôle, and the piece will be produced here in the Fall. Oh, how can the theatres accommodate all the plays which will be "produced here in the Fall"? Also on the Williams schedule is "All Souls' Eve," a comedy by Anne Crawford Flexner, containing a star part for a woman.

The official announcement by the industrious Comstock-Gest combination reveals a number of works which have not yet been touched upon here. There will be, for example, "The Checker Board," a comedy by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, who obviously have not been idling away the recent weeks. There will be "The Cave Girl," the story of a back-to-nature attempt, written by George Middleton and rewritten by Guy Bolton. "Adam and Eva," a comedy by the same pair of authors, will open at the Longacre Theatre some time in August.

Oliver D. Bailey, who has been vainly wooing success in New York for a year or two or three, will try it again with a comedy-drama entitled "Three Blind Mice," the work of a Chicago lawyer, Julian F. Thompson. Edgar McGregor will introduce a farce entitled "A Dislocated Honeymoon," with which he has been struggling for a season or more. C. W. Bell is the author. Mr. McGregor will also sponsor an Oriental novelty by George C. Hazelton, co-author of "The Yellow Jacket," called "The Haunted Pajamas," with O. P. Heggie in the leading rôle. A little later Mr. Heggie will go from that play to John Galsworthy's "A Bit o' Love," already tested on the Coast.

The Selwyns, in addition to presenting Holbrook Blinn in Eugene Walter's "The Challenge," will bring "Wedding Bells" to town early in October. It is a comedy by Salisbury Field, who collaborated on "Twin Beds," and will have Margaret Lawrence in the leading rôle. Edgar Selwyn, in addition to trying his luck as an actor again with "Pierre of the Plains," is turning out a comedy in which Roland Young and Marion Coakley will have the principal rôles. Georges Flateau, the French actor who played in "The Crowded Hour" during the past season, will have a play written for him by Jane Murfin, Jane Cowl's erstwhile collaborator.

Avery Hopwood, in addition to being represented here by Mr. Belasco's production of "The Gold Diggers," will have a Selwyn-produced farce in November. Porter Emerson Browne is the author of "The Whirlwind," which sounds like a melodrama, but is said to be a comedy. And Percival Knight will have the leading rôle in a quaintly titled play by Max Marcin and Frederick Isham—"The Daisy Pushers."

Mr. Woods continues to add to his long list. Thus Marjorie Blaine and Stanley Lewis, having already sold him "The Unknown Woman" for Marjorie Rambeau's use, have repeated the trick with a piece called "The Man and His Shadow." Mr. Woods has accepted also, in recent weeks, a play by Howard Culbertson called "Radium," and an untitled play by S. Jay Kaufman and Tom Barry. Still further, he has bought a farce, "Ladies' Night," from Charlton Andrews, whose previous theatrical experience had been as remote from farce as the adaptation of Bernstein's "The Torches" could well be.

Speaking of Bernstein, his "La Griffe" will be produced here by the Shuberts next season, being now in process of adaptation by Matthew C. Woodward, hitherto known as a lyric writer. Mr. Woodward is also touching up for the American stage Michael Morton's melodrama, "In the Night Watch." Also leaving his original field is Gustav Blum, who, with Elias Lieberman, is now the author of a drama called "Masks," which the Shuberts will present. Blum had previously collaborated on "A Sleepless Night."

Eugene Brieux's "The Red Robe," according to present plans, will be presented here, following several unsuccessful attempts on the part of various managers to secure the rights.

Adolph Klauber is grooming for the metropolis a farce yclept "Nighty Night," the work of Martha M. Stanley and Adelaide Matthews. Carroll McComas will have the principal rôle. Joseph Klaw, son of Marc Klaw, will be active as a producer, having acquired, among other plays, a piece entitled "Double Harness," by the Messrs. Marks and Paulton.

John Cort has accepted a farce by Earl Derr Biggers, now called "Kathleen," but which probably will be more farcically titled before it reaches New York. May Vokes will head the cast. In Detroit during the last week a comedy entitled "The Man Outside," the work of Kilbourn Gordon and Ward Howe, was tested, and is expected to be a Fall offering.

"Dangerous Years," which deals presumably with the awakening of youth, is the work of Edward Locke and will be produced by the Shuberts. Walter Hast, in addition to bringing "Scandal" to town, has acquired a play entitled "After," the work of a Chicago University professor, (Frederick Brugger,) which he will produce here.

"Gyp for Short," the work of Charles Bradley, will reach the stage, and so will "An Innocent Idea," by Martin Brown. "An Innocent Idea" is said to be a travesty on the bedroom drama, being concerned with the manner in which an unsuccessful serious play—a play within the play—is made into a hit by a bedroom and a few deft changes. Robert Emmett Keane and John Westley will have the principal rôles.

Charles B. Dillingham has been keeping the cables hot and thereby succeeded in obtaining the American rights to "Caesar's Wife," which has been running at the Royalty in London.

To go back to Mr. Woods, that busy producer has also accepted a new play by Channing Pollock—bought on a title, according to the story, and written by the author in the three succeeding weeks. The potent title was "A Room at the Ritz."

THE NEW PLAYS

This is the former "Greenwich Village Follies," originally announced for production last week.

CONCERTS START IN THE STADIUM

TOMORROW is the big event of Summer music in the city, when the Stadium Symphony Orchestra will start eight weeks of nightly concerts in the open air at the City College athletic field, on Washington Heights at 136th Street, overlooking the Harlem plains and the distant Long Island Sound. Better music in as beautiful surroundings and as commanding views would be hard to find anywhere in the world today.

Beethoven's Fifth Symphony will open the series, by choice of Arnold Volpe, the conductor. It will be preceded by the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner." Rose Ponselle of the Metropolitan will be heard in her famous air from Verdi's "Forza del Destino," in which she made her début last Winter, as well as in airs from Ponchielli's "La Gioconda" and Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana," this last with the full Metropolitan Opera chorus.

Monday's program will add for the orchestra Weber's overture to "Oberon," Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Spanish Caprice," and Tschaikovsky's "Slavic March." On Tuesday night Forrest Lamont, tenor of the Chicago Opera Company, and Edna Kellogg, a new soprano of the Metropolitan, will be heard. On Wednesday, Sascha Jacobson, violin, and Winifred Byrd, piano, will play, and on Thursday May Peterson and Blanche Consolvo will sing.

For July 4, the Stadium's founder, Adolph Lewisohn, has donated a concert by the entire Metropolitan chorus, the orchestra and assisting artists, to the city authorities for a great festival of music in celebration of Independence Day. The week's end will introduce the Stadium Quartet, consisting of Idelle Patterson, Lilian Ewbank, Ernest Davis, and Earle Tuckerman, in operatic numbers.

Other artists to follow later are Samuel Gardner, Percy Hemus, Caroline Cone-Baldwin, Sue Harvard, and Henry Weldon. On July 16 Henry Hadley, the composer, will appear as guest conductor at the Stadium in his own symphony work, "Salome."

FIFTH WEEK OF FREE BAND.

The fifth week of Columbia University's free band concerts on the green will begin tomorrow on Morningside Heights, at Broadway and 120th Street. The Summer session is about to start, and the concerts thrice weekly will draw a large attendance from the 10,000 students enrolled, representing every State in the Union. Additional seats are being provided, while a more ambitious musical fare has already been shown in the performance on Friday last of a considerable part of Tschaikovsky's symphony "Pathétique" by the New York Military Band, led by Edwin Franko Goldman.

Among those who are sponsoring this series are Mrs. Helen Harley Jenkins, Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim, Murry Guggenheim, Felix Warburg, and others. Not only have they made the concerts possible, but the new standard set, they believe, should help toward creating a greater interest in band music. Mr. Goldman has arranged interesting programs for the coming week, designed to appeal to all degrees of musical taste.

PARK CONCERT FOR JULY 4.

The Park Department announces a concert, made possible by the generosity of Elkan Naumburg, to be given by Franz Kaltenborn and his orchestra on the Mall in Central Park at 4 P. M. next Friday, July 4. Gorea Giertlen, soprano, will sing Handel's "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth," and songs by Marcheal and Mellicent Wick. The orchestra program, opening with "America" and closing with "The Star-Spangled Banner," will include music of Bach, Rossini, Mendelssohn, Tschaikovsky, Svendsen, Johann Strauss, Herbert, and De Koven.

STARS AT OCEAN GROVE.

Beginning next Saturday, the Van Hugo Musical Bureau plans to present a series of eight extraordinary concerts during the Summer months at Ocean Grove. Among those announced to appear are Galli-Curci, Margaret Matzenauer, John McCormack, Mischa Elman, Anna Case, and the Metropolitan Opera Quartet.

IN THE MAILBAG.

To the Dramatic Editor:

I have read with much interest your recent interviews with P. J. Kelly and Dudley Digges, and their remarks concerning the Irish National Theatre in Dublin prompt me to ask how it is that they both omit any reference to the person who supplied the Abbey Theatre Players with the sinews of war, and thus enabled them to continue their artistic work, and gave much-needed encouragement to Synge, Yeats, and others. Does it happen to be because this person is an Englishwoman, Miss Horniman, now so well known for her conduct of the Gaiety Theatre in Manchester?

ARCHIBALD BELL.

San Francisco, June 15, 1919.

[There was, of course, no intent on the part of Mr. Kelly to rob Miss Horniman of any credit which is hers. His reminiscences of the Irish Players were concerned largely with their earliest days, before Miss Horniman became interested; her part in salvaging the institution at a later date was mentioned.]

NOTICED AND NOTED.

THE prediction made more or less generally some time ago that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was planning extension into the field of exhibition seems to have been fulfilled. As was reported in these columns recently, interests identified with or friendly to the corporation now control the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, and the chain of houses operated by B. S. Moss. And from London has come the report that the Picture Playhouses Corporation, with a capital of $5,000,000, has been organized to build and manage theatres in England. This organization is affiliated with the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, the formation of which marked the international extension of the corporation as a producer.

In effect, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures—and on a scale hitherto unknown. In this may be seen one of the important facts in the motion picture industry, namely, its establishment in the world of big business. There are extensive business organizations in connection with the stage, of course, but none of them has assumed the proportions of screen interests, and there has not been anything approaching the latter's tendency to centralization or the concentration of capital. What effect big business in motion pictures will have upon the development of the photoplay, which the average person is interested in, cannot be foretold. Many guesses might be made, some encouraging, some the reverse. Others neutral.

Again the motion picture comes to the rescue—with its enduring film. Vitagraph will make pictures of saloon and cafe interiors throughout the country—palatial barrooms, Bowery dives, and just plain gin mills. The excuse is that saloon sets may be needed in the future when there will be no one to say how they should be made.

Will the day ever come when no man will know what the inside of a saloon looked like?

Anent the rather frequent complaints against subtitles voiced in these columns, Dora Davidson writes to suggest that their irritating habit of interrupting scenes might be overcome if they were flashed on the screen below or above pictures. This would certainly improve matters, but is likely to meet technical obstacles. As each still picture usually fills its whole frame, directors making photoplays would have to know in advance what pictures were to be titled so that they might be reduced in size to make room for the words. The assembling and titling of a photoplay is done after all of the scenes have been made, and it is doubtful if any scheme could be worked out by which part of the work would be done in advance. It does not seem that any plan of reducing the evil of the subtitle is practicable—save that of reducing the subtitle itself.

A press agent announces that a certain star's wardrobe never cost less than $10,000 for each photoplay and, "more often than not," as much as $25,000.

World Pictures reports that Herbert M. Dawley's remarkable "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain" brought the highest price ever paid for the foreign rights for a one-reel picture. Mr. Dawley's production has many virtues, not the least of which is that it is only one reel in length. The average five-reel feature would be better if it was only three reels long.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is reported to have insured Clare Briggs, the creator of the Briggs comedies, for $500,000, "to protect itself against loss in the case of accident, sickness or death" depriving it of Mr. Briggs's services. Will the future slogan of the distributing companies be: "Get him dead or alive?"

It, a motion-picture paper published on the coast, has the rather attractive habit of referring to the relatively unknown husbands of well-known wives by the names of the latter. Thus: Mr. Marjorie Rambeau, Mr. Marguerite Clark, Mr. Elsie Ferguson.

That seems simple justice. Should a man achieve fame just because he marries a famous woman?

Universal has purchased the screen rights to "Auld Jeremiah," by Henry C. Rowland, which appeared in The Saturday Evening Post, and "The Altar on Little Thunder," which appeared in Harper's Magazine.

"The Hoodlum," Mary Pickford's latest photoplay, has been completed. The scenario was written by Bernard McConville and the production was directed by Sydney A. Franklin.

THE BETTER WAY.

THE proposed local law that would have made the Commissioner of Licenses the censor of motion pictures seems to have been buried by the Board of Aldermen. For this many will be thankful. The idea of censorship is repugnant to them.

But some people still believe in censorship as the cure for all of the ills of the screen, and there are evidences that the agitation for a censor in New York is not dead. It might be well, therefore, for those whose minds are open on the subject to reflect upon a recent demonstration of the two methods by which a film involved in controversy can be brought up for judgment and suppressed or authorized for exhibition. The case has been presented by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures which, at the request of this department, has made a statement on the subject of films dealing with venereal disease with particular reference to the picture "Fit to Win," which has been indorsed by the United States Public Health Service.

The statement begins with a reminder of the fact that the License Commissioner sought to prevent the exhibition of "Fit to Win" in New York, but that three Federal Court Judges approved it after certain specified changes in it had been made, Judge Learned Hand finally granting a permanent injunction restraining the License Commissioner from interfering with it.

"The proposed censorship amendment," continues the board, "sought to give to the Commissioner of Licenses the authority to inspect all motion pictures to be exhibited in New York prior to their release to the general public, with the arbitrary power to prohibit the exhibition of any picture he might make objection to. If it had passed it would have shut out any motion picture from a review by the courts, and therefore any recourse toward obtaining an injunction against a decision which might be wholly capricious, prejudicial, and arbitrary. Had the recently pending amendment been in effect at the time the Commissioner of Licenses prohibited the local exhibition of 'Fit to Win,' the Government of the United States itself would have been denied the opportunity of spreading Government propaganda of a character which has been determined by experts to be of the utmost importance in safeguarding the health of the public.

"The danger of such an ordinance vesting the Commissioner of Licenses with arbitrary power to decide for upward of six million people what they shall or shall not see, does not rest in any discrepancy of judgment or inability of the present Commissioner of Licenses to decide justly and impartially as to the merits of any given motion picture. The danger abides in the whole principle of granting to any one man who may hold the office of Commissioner of Licenses in the present or in the future such completely arbitrary privilege. Such authority given to one man is intensely undemocratic and completely at variance with our whole philosophy of government. It is an intellectual impossibility for one individual to pronounce infallible judgment on questions both ethical and moral, and it is a physical impossibility for any one individual to inspect personally all motion pictures released to the public. Such an individual would necessarily have to achieve this work through a staff of assistants, probably not as capable as himself, and would therefore be largely dependent on their judgment and not his own in reaching his decisions."

The statement then points out that censorship would deny a motion picture the right of "trial by jury," and goes to show how the National Board works to obtain such a trial for any film about which there seems to be a dispute.

"The National Board of Review, seeking to arrive at a genuine expression of public opinion, organized a meeting of representative citizens, both men and women, at Wurlitzer Hall, to review a picture of like nature and purpose to 'Fit to Win,' namely, 'Open Your Eyes,' now at the Century Theatre, authorized and supported by the Public Health Service to spread the propaganda of the danger, prevention, and control of venereal diseases. This audience almost unanimously agreed that the picture is fit to show the general public and should be shown the general public, embodying, as they felt, a real educational message. Such an audience, composed of people from all walks of life, both laymen and experts, constituted a real jury sitting to decide impartially for the best interests of the general public as to the ethical and moral status of the film under review.

"How does such a procedure, from a point of view of democratic principle and common sense, compare with that of the inspection of a film by one individual having authority to decide arbitrarily whether it shall be exhibited? It represents the difference between official censorship and democratic film review."

WHEN CENSORS DISAGREE.

"Very recently a member of the executive staff of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation appeared before the Motion-Picture Committee of the leading woman's club in an important city. The club favored local censorship. And it considered that censorship would be rightly placed in the hands of its own committee.

"The speaker rather astonished the club by offering no visible opposition to its ideas.

"'I presume'—he spoke as if its Soviet were already established—'you would distinctly oppose the screening of Coppée's "The Guilty Man"?'

"A moment of silence, and then one woman said, determinedly: 'No—I shouldn't.' Cries of dismay and violent dissent rang around her.

"'I say that I should not oppose it,' she repeated, stanchly. 'I tell my children everything. The only way to shun evil is to be able to recognize it!'

"'Preposterous!' exclaimed another woman. 'The work has its place as a book for adult reading, and for adult patronage in the theatre, perhaps. But before the absolutely indiscriminate audiences of the movie houses—never!'

"'You're both wrong,' chimed in a third seeress. '"The Guilty Man" could be shown carefully edited, perhaps slightly rearranged—'

"And the tumult increased, until their interrogator suddenly spoke again.

"'Ladies,' he said, 'there are scarcely more than a dozen of you in this small room. You believe and announce that you are fully competent to select the screen entertainment for more than half a million people, of all ages, conditions of intelligence, religious belief, and material surrounding. You represent not only one class, but one circle in that class, whose diversions, tastes and beliefs are very much alike. I mention just one play and behold—you cannot agree among yourselves! You have demonstrated what I think of censorship.'"

COSTS OF PRODUCTION.

Items to be considered by a motion picture producing company in figuring the cost of making a photoplay are set down in a statement received from the Universal Film Company.

"The average observer of a motion picture," says the statement, "little realizes what is involved in the making of it. He does not know, for example, that the expense of the production must be estimated closely before the camera crank is turned, and he probably has only a vague idea of what this expense is.

"In making its estimate the production department of a motion picture company usually consults the director of the picture, the scenario editor and the technical chief. The recommendations of all are considered, and the result is put down on a sheet with figures opposite the following items:

"Cost of the original story.

"Cost of negative and positive film.

"Wardrobe and property purchases and rentals, scenery, and sets.

"Automobile hire, transportation charges, traveling, and maintenance on location trips.

"Lighting, labor, and current incidentals.

"Arsenal and ranch stock expenses.

"Miscellaneous supplies and expenses.

"The number of scenes in the photoplay are taken into consideration by the estimaters, the number of reels, sets, scenes and days of actual filming, the celluloid footage, the labor in developing the negative and positive, the number of locations and their places, and the never-ending series of incidental expenses.

"The usual five-reel production of today costs from $20,000 to $40,000, and sometimes a little more. The six, seven and eight reel productions cost anywhere from $75,000 to $100,000. The ten-reel productions usually run as high as $250,000 in cost."

SOLDIER MUSICIANS BACK.

When hundreds of musicians in America threw down the baton to enter the war, to some the idea was incongruous, even ludicrous—the emotional musician engaged in the brutal, uncomfortable business of fighting. To those who knew the patriotic fervor and adaptability of these inspired music makers there was more than a little anxiety for the future of the warrior musicians on the return of peace. How would the delicate mechanism of their psychology be affected by an activity so powerful and so far from their normal desires? The question is asked and answered in a recent statement by the War Department.

Some few musicians, like David Hochstein, the young violinist who lost his life in the Argonne, will never return. But unassuming numbers of them have taken their places again in the ranks of players. One may hear them in the theatre orchestras. They are playing in the cabaret jazz bands, content to return to the humdrum of the life which was so enthralling to them before the war. It may be a bit stale to them now. But the reaction will soon set in, has already come to many who have lost the first restless craving for excitement that they felt on their return from the front.

Already Percy Grainger, composer and pianist, has left Fort Hamilton and returned to his old job of writing music and playing it in concert. Irving Berlin, king of the popular song, has stopped inspiring the soldier in war and has set his talents to inspiring the soldier in civilian life. Albert Spalding, one of the best of America's violinists, is home from the front. His old job of fiddling and making the world safe for culture is waiting for him, and he will take it gladly. Pianists, tenors, trombonists are all slipping back into the old paths, and are glad to be there, in the opinion of their former commanders in far different fields.

Young Singers Heard.

Edward Falck, formerly of the Metropolitan, will hold voice trials for young singers every Saturday noon in the projection room of the Rialto Theatre. Hugo Riesenfeld, the director, says it may encourage new aspirants to learn that it was in this manner he discovered Martin Brefel, Emanuel List, Greek Evans, and Jean Gordon, the last named now engaged for grand opera by Gatti-Casazza.

PEACE HAS ITS OPERAS.

London's Post-War Revival Recalls the Spacious Days of Handel.

To mark the reopening, after nearly five years, of Covent Garden, said The London Telegraph of recent date, Richard A. Northcott has written a little history of that famous house which will be read with interest by a good many operagoers. It does not profess to give anything more than a brief résumé of historic events in the annals of that theatre, or to set forth more than salient incidents that have occurred within its walls. But as furnishing a peep into London's operatic past, and recalling many a red-letter day—or night—in the long history of the Garden Mr. Northcott's pages are timely. All manner of odd things he tells, beginning with Handel's associations with the first theatre of the name, opened on Dec. 7, 1732.

"In these present days of exorbitant theatre rentals, when playhouses hardly a quarter the size of Covent Garden are let for as much as £500 a week," the British newspaper continues, "it is not a little curious to read that Handel, for the season 1757-58, paid £25 a night for the use of the building, plus an extra charge on each occasion of two guineas for coal. But no doubt these charges were reckoned very high in those days.

"Handel's orchestra, however, was not an extravagant affair. In 1738, we are told, his 'band of musick' cost him about £4 a performance; but when royalty attended "the number of instrumentalists was increased, and on one occasion, a gala commanded by George II., the orchestra's remuneration amounted to £5 3s. 4d. In those days, presumably, orchestral players had not dreamt of a protection society."

There were brave doings, the report adds—and others less impressive—in the house erected on the site of the one destroyed by fire in 1808; notably a command performance on Feb. 7, 1821, to celebrate the accession of George IV. A few years later the King ordered a representation—in English—of "Der Freischütz." Clearly there was no lack of enthusiasm for opera in the vernacular at that time.

One of the newspapers recorded that "the crowd in the pit was so overpowering that most of the few women who had ventured into it were obliged to be taken up into the boxes, many of them in a fainting state, and all as if just emerged from a bath. As the ladies in the dress circle assisted in pulling them up from beneath, their humanity was loudly applauded by the rest of the audience." The receipts on that occasion, as told in the souvenir booklets, amounted to the large sum of £973, or about $4,700, half the cost of the average Metropolitan performance in New York today.

Another lively scene occurred at the "command" on Nov. 2, 1820, to commemorate the accession of William IV.

"The gentlemen in the galleries took off all their superfluous clothing, the better to encounter the heat, and then betook themselves to whistling and other noises. The people in the pit were too crowded at first, and thereafter beat and half-throttled one another, until several of them, men and women, being forced to escape through the boxes, the numbers were in some degree thinned, and quiet was restored."

It was in this second theatre that the Royal Italian Opera was established, on April 8, 1847, with a performance of "Semiramide."

Grisi, Alboni, and Tamburini sustained the chief parts. These and other artists, together with the conductor, Michael Costa, had seceded from Her Majesty's, to the very natural vexation of the impresario, Lumley, who rudely but wittily stigmatised his departed stars as "Costa-mongers."

The opening Italian season was financed by a young and inexperienced enthusiast, Edward Delafield, whose combined youth, inexperience, and enthusiasm cost him the tidy little sum of £34,758. More money than that, the modern British writer fancies, has been lost in later days in a single season of opera in London.

PLAN ST. CECILIA TOUR.

First announced as the Augusteum Orchestra, from the classic hall it occupies at home, the Saint Cecilia Symphony Orchestra of Rome is now scheduled to begin an American tour at the Metropolitan Opera House next October. Italian clubs and musical societies throughout the United States are interested in this first tour of their country's noted musical organization which comes here under the patronage of the Italian Government.

The Royal Academy of Saint Cecilia, the parent organization of the orchestra, has been said to be the oldest musical organization in the world. The present orchestra includes more than eighty members, and it engagements will largely be under the auspices of patriotic associations and local civic bodies, as was the tour last year of the Royal Grenadiers Band.

HISTORY OF THE FIFTH

Division of Regulars Took Gallant Part in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne Operations

The following story of the Fifth Division of Regulars is compiled from official A. E. F. orders and from documents prepared by the division staff.

THE War Department order for the organization of the 5th Division of Regulars, kown as the "Ace of Diamonds Division" because of its red diamond insignia, was issued Dec. 12, 1917. The first commander was Major Gen. Charles H. Muir, subsequently the battle commander of the 28th or Pennsylvania Guard Division. General Muir, who retained command of the 5th only ten days, was relieved on Dec. 22 by Major Gen. J. E. McMahon, who trained the division at Camp Logan, Texas, and later directed its movement overseas.

The division began its overseas movement March 6, 1918, when the 7th Engineers sailed from New York for England en route to France. By the following May 11 it had assembled at Bar-sur-Aube, its training centre, and on May 30 orders were issued for the command to move to a quiet sector in the Vosges.

Preparing for Battle.

The battle training in the Vosges was under French direction. In the course of the preparation for the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne campaigns, in both of which the 5th was to have a part, the division participated in two minor operations, suffering total casualties of 300 officers and men, of whom 4 officers and 38 men were killed, 5 officers and 41 men wounded severely, and 1 officer and 50 men gassed.

The next phase of its activities took the 5th into action in what was known as the Frapelle operation. Frapelle was a village in a salient in the American lines. Its capture was ordered on Aug. 17, and on that day the 2d Battalion of the 6th United States Infantry with its attached machine gun company, mortar sections, and Company A of the 7th Engineers and the 15th United States Machine Gun Battalion moved forward for the capture of the village. The Germans were driven back and an attempt by them, on the following day, to recapture Frapelle fell down under American fire.

In the Frapelle operation the division suffered 571 casualties, which included 1 officer and 35 men killed, 5 officers and 75 men severely wounded and 11 officers and 176 men gassed.

St. Mihiel Operation.

On Sept. 6 the 5th Division began a four nights' march into the St. Mihiel sector, moving only at night. On Sept. 12 the artillery preparation began with one of the largest concentrations of the entire war.

On the first day the 5th Division captured 1,129 prisoners, of which 351 were from the 352d Regiment, opposite it, and 788 from the 77th Reserve Division. This indicated great losses on the part of both the regiment and the division which were opposed to it, the thorough demoralization of the enemy and the crushing of his opposition for the moment.

During the St. Mihiel action the 5th captured in all 1,242 prisoners, including 32 officers and 1 woman Red Cross nurse; also 13 150-mm. guns, 20 trench mortars, 100,000 rounds of artillery ammunition, 7 anti-tank guns, 1 anti-aircraft battery, 125 machine guns, and 550 rifles.

The division's casualties in this operation were 1,562 men of whom 11 officers and 249 men were killed, 13 officers and 361 men severely wounded, 1 officer and 119 men missing, and 27 officers and 781 men less seriously wounded.

The Argonne-Meuse.

On the evening of Oct. 4, the detached elements of the division having rejoined, with the exception of the 5th Field Artillery Brigade, the infantry troops of the division moved by bus to the Souilly area, and on Oct. 5 moved by marching to the Nixeville area. The troops bivouacked east and west of a line between Souhesme and the road junction south of Moulin Brule. Thenceforth until the armistice the troops were never in billets.

Major Gen. Hanson E. Ely succeeded on Oct. 17 to the command of the 5th Division, this also being the day on which the Bois de la Pultiere was cleaned up, the lines of the division advancing and establishing contact on the right with the 3d Division of Regulars.

In the first Meuse-Argonne operations the difficulties with which the 3d Army Corps contended in the effort to improve its position were numerous, and in an official order, Major Gen. John L. Hines, the corps commander, expressed his deep appreciation of the part the 5th Division had "in establishing the present advantageous position of this corps."

In the second Argonne-Meuse operations, from Oct. 23 to 28, the 5th Division was in bivouac, under shell fire from the east of the Meuse and exposed to airplane bombing at night. On the nights of Oct. 26 and 27 the division relieved the 3d Regulars, the front line at that time extending from the northeastern corner of the Bois des Rappes along the northeastern edge of the Calire Chenes, Hill 299, and the northern and eastern edges of the Bois de Foret. When the general attack of the First American Army began, Nov. 1, the orders to the 5th Division were to "stand fast and be the pivot on the western bank of the Meuse for the swing of the 3d Corps and the corps beyond, to the north and northeast.

The total battle casualties of the 5th Division in all operations, including the Meuse-Argonne, was 8,280 men. Of these 62 officers and 1,222 men were killed, 102 officers and 2,163 men severely wounded, 176 officers and 3,963 men slightly wounded, 3 officers and 346 men missing, and 43 enlisted men captured. The prisoners captured by the 5th Division toteled 2,057, of whom 45 were officers. The enemy material captured by the division during the war included 26 heavy guns, 67 light artillery pieces, and 802 machine guns.

WHY NEW ZEALAND STAYED WET

Soldiers' Vote Overcame Civilian Dry Majority in That British Island

THE soldiers' vote has saved the liquor trade—for the time being, at any rate—in the most exciting liquor v. prohibition contest that the Dominion has seen. The civilian vote gave a majority of 13,570 for prohibition, but the polling among the soldiers was very heavily against prohibition, and at the time of writing, with some soldiers' votes still to come, there is in the aggregate a soldier majority for continuance of 22,558 and the issue is beyond doubt. Details of the voting are as under:

CIVILIAN VOTE.

For continuance	231,985
For prohibition	245,555
Majority for prohibition	13,570

SOLDIERS' VOTE.

For continuance	29,542
For prohibition	7,304
Majority for continuance	22,558

TOTAL CIVILIAN AND SOLDIERS' VOTES.

For continuance	261,847
For prohibition	252,859

It should be explained that under the earliest referendum law in New Zealand there was no national prohibition issue. There was local option; the men and women in every Parliamentary district had the right to say every three years whether liquor licenses should be be abolished in the district, or whether the number should be reduced, or whether the number should be continued. A three-fifths majority of votes recorded was necessary to carry prohibition. There was no compensation for houses closed under reduction or prohibition. Some years ago the law was altered to provide for a vote being taken on national prohibition, as well as on the question of local licenses, and the reduction issue was eliminated. The law provided that national prohibition had to get three-fifths of the number of votes recorded before it became law, and that four years were to elapse before it came into effect. Again, there was no compensation. At the first national prohibition poll there was a majority of over 80,000 for prohibition, but it was not sufficient to carry the proposal. At the second, which was held a few months after the war started, there was a majority of more than 10,000 against prohibition.

During the war the evils of the liquor trade were much discussed. As a war measure drinking places were closed at 6 o'clock in the evening instead of being allowed, as had always been the custom, to remain open till 10 or 11 at night. Bars were closed by order of the military authorities on the day that vessels with returning troops on board arrived. Treating was made illegal. A strong movement, running parallel to the old prohibition movement, was started with the object of carrying prohibition on the ground of efficiency. The Government had appointed as a body to advise it on matters connected with the war an Efficiency Board, composed of some of the leading business men in the Dominion. This board recommended that the liquor trade be bought out for £4,500,000, which the board considered would be fair compensation.

The Prohibition Party had always opposed compensation, but agreed to accept it now, so as to get a chance of abolishing the liquor business at once. Both sides put their cases before the Government, and as a result a new licensing act was passed at the end of 1918. This provided that in April of this year a special national poll should be taken on the issues of national prohibition, with £4,500,000 compensation, and continuance. The bare majority was to decide. If prohibition was carried it would operate from July 1 of this year. If it was not carried there would be another poll at the next Parliamentary election. The issues taken would be prohibition without compensation, State control of the liquor traffic; continuance. It was an arrangement in which each side thought it had the advantage and in which the interests of the moderates were hardly considered.

The campaign was a warm one. The prohibitionists enlisted the help of many business men and doctors who had never before taken an active part in the movement; every economic and scientific argument that could be used was brought out and emphasized. Prohibition lecturers were imported from other countries. "Efficiency" meetings were the order of the day. The "trade" contented itself for the most part with advertisements. Never had so much interest been taken in a prohibition toll. When the numbers went up on the night of the poll, there was a majority for prohibition of 13,000. The soldiers' votes, both abroad and in New Zealand, were being counted separately. The general opinion was that the soldiers would upset the verdict of the civilians, and so it proved. Return affer return, from Germany, France, Britain, and ships at sea, showed large majorities for continuance.

Why have the soldiers voted in this way? New Zealand training camps were "dry," and liquor was not permitted on transports. Many of the men, of course, voted against prohibition for the reasons that civilian men did so. (The taking of the soldiers' vote separately was valuable because, for the first time, it gave some indication of the proportion of men in the community who vote one way and the other. The figures for the civilian voting in liquor referenda do not enable one to say how the sexes voted.) But the soldiers resented the holding of the referendum while they were away. They felt that they should have been here to take part in the campaign. It is curious that the majority against prohibition was not so high among the soldiers who had returned as it was among the soldiers abroad. The inference is that some of the men who had returned were influenced by the prohibitionists' arguments. Opponents of prohibition argue that the soldiers' vote is to some extent the result of travel and life in communities where prohibition is never dreamed of and people drink alcoholic liquor rationally, just as the New Zealander drinks tea.

The question now is, How will these soldiers vote at the next referendum, which cannot be long delayed? Will they, too, be influenced by prohibition argument?

THE ETERNAL GIRL

By JAMES GIBBONS HUNEKER

BALZAC, master of souls, knower of the heart feminine, makes his lovely Princesse de Cadignan say to the enamored Daniel d'Arthez: "I have often heard miserable specimens regret that they were women, wish that they were men; I have always looked upon them with pity. * * * If I had to choose I should prefer being a woman. A fine pleasure it is to owe one's triumph to strength, to all the powers that are given you by the laws made by you! But when we see you at our feet uttering and doing silly things, is it not then an intoxicating happiness to feel one's self the weakness that triumphs? Yet when we succeed we are obliged to keep silent through pride. The silence of the slave frightens the master."

This revelation of the Eternal Feminine was written in 1839. Had Balzac lived till 1919 he could have painted full-length portraits of women who keep quiet neither in triumph nor in defeat, and at whose feet pedals, not suitors, register emotional experiences; for the pedals of the piano are the soul of it. Nowadays, to be ashamed of one's sex would be like an insane confession wrung from poor overworked creatures, one to whom the French novelist might have denied womanhood. Females may flout the beauty of being born wearers of skirts; women, never. Indeed, the boot is on the masculine leg. It is a sad corrective for masculine presumption, masculine vanity, to realize that we are only tolerated. A few far-seeing males have known this; today the toleration is elevated to the dignity of a psychological system. Those long-haired, soft-eyed creatures, as Guy de Maupassant described them, are true critics of men, weighing us in scales that are mortifyingly candid, pardoning us when they love, but, after all, only allowing the lords of creation to kneel in humble attitudes before the feminine shrine. In the current phraseology, woman has "found herself"—as if she were ever lost! She has also discovered a panacea for irritated vanity and indigestion, a familiar combination called in romances a broken heart. This prophylactic is art, and if intelligently employed misery flies forth through the window as music enters the door.

Once, for sheer fun's sake, we made an imaginary classification of the music preferred by certain heroines of fiction, or music they might prefer, as many of them are confessedly tone-deaf. Years ago Mr. Howells remarked this fact. Consider Clarissa Harlowe, or any girl in the brood of immortal Jane Austen—do not they suggest musical possibilities? What a literary paper to read before a Mothers' Meeting on a sultry day in September at Chautauqua—"The Musical Tastes of the Heroines of Fiction"! And with what facile logic, the logic of numbers, a clever girl could unhorse her ruder opponents. The theme fascinates. Think of the year 1800. Beethoven had written some piano sonatas not well known abroad. In London town there were still harpsichords, and Mozart and Scarlatti were admired. The modern grand piano was a dream that nestled in the brain of Beethoven, himself a master of the grand manner. But tone as he conceived and produced it was almost unknown to his generation; a pearly touch, smooth scales, and a crisp style were affected by such women who could spare the time from their social duties to practise. The piano music of the eighteenth century is largely woman's music, was written for women. Those virginals, spinets, clavichords, harpsichords, are they not, all of them, feminine? Are they not the musical rib plucked by amiable fate from the snoring side of the masculine church organ?

Historical retrospect palls, yet it would not be amiss to recall the piano music of that century. From the old dance suites burgeoned our present music. Those graceful writers of old Italy, old France, made gay melodies, interpreting the artificial life of their surroundings. We catch glimpses of delicate faces with patches, powdered heads, dainty struttings, and courtly woolngs. The graceful minuette, lively courante, decorous allemande, stately sarabande, quaint gavotte, and tripping gigue—these and others with high-colored titles enchanted our great-great-grandmothers. Nor was the note of the tragic missing. They enjoyed "L'Homicide" and "The Fair Murdress," and any number of pieces named after tears, anger, caprice, sorrow, revenge, desire. Animals and the gods of Greece or Rome were quoted. Flanked by wax candles, with aspirants smirking at her side, fair woman played with genteel gravity and bewitching coquetry Scarlatti or Emmanuel Bach. For the love of art, of course, not missing a glance at matrimonial possibilities. The keyboard then, as now, was a favorite weapon of feminine offense. Take down Browning from your shelf and read "A Toccata of Galuppi's."

The giant, Johann Bach, meets with little mention in the letters, diaries, or books of this epoch. That grim old forge-master of fugues could hardly have appealed to the dreams of fair women, even if they had been cognizant of the existence of the Well-Tempered Clavichord. More to their taste were Handel's suites, which, though classical in character, are replete with attractive music. Haydn, owing much to Bach's son, Emmanuel, wrote pleasingly for the instrument. His sonatas were not too difficult for those ladies who could fluently finger Scarlatti. That Italian, with his witty skippings, swift hand-crossings and implacable vivacity, is still as rainbow gold for most pianists. The sweetly lyric, the mellifluous, the ever gay Mozart fashioned sonatas as gods carve the cosmos. Any form he touched he beautified. The solo sonatas written with ease, and for money, were also written with both eyes on the fair amateurs of his period. She admired Mozart more than Haydn; he was more melodious, and prettier were his decorative patterns. Mozart mildly raged in the hearts of the ladies and slender fingers troubled the chaste outlines of his sonatas. But the eighteenth sonata, preceded by a fantasia in the same key of C minor, impeded the flight of these butterflies. In the work were mutterings of the music that awes us in "Don Giovanni," and it might be called a precursor of Beethoven and his mighty thunderings.

Behold! the conqueror approaches—the Buonarroti, the Bonaparte, the Balzac of music:—Ludwig van Beethoven. In the track of his growling tempests were women, nobly nurtured, charming women, Nanetta Streicher, Baroness Ertmann, Julia Guicciardi, Bettina van Arnim, and Thérèse of Brunswick. They played for him, and he, great genius and despiser of conventionality, stretched his stout, short body upon drawing room couches. It is not an appealing picture, but a characteristic. It must please latter-day pagans who flout the niceties of society. However, not all his sonatas were admired to the studying point; the early ones, mere exercises of a youthful athlete juggling with the weapons of his grandsire, alone called for commendation. Dedicated to Joseph Haydn, the first three did not excite the ire of teachers or critics. But as the composer developed he felt more, suffered more, and with knowledge his musical canvases began to excite fear and repulsion. "Why these gloomy colors, Mr. Beethoven?" was asked by his listeners, and his rivals, the Woelffls, Gelinaks, Hummels, were preferred. There is modishness even in the art of writing for the piano, and Beethoven despised fashion as would have Diana of the Ephesians the millinery of Lutetia.

So he was neglected for a half century, and long-fingered, long-haired virtuosi overran Europe with their trills, trickeries, variations, and fantasias. Effect was their shibboleth, from Hummel to Thalberg, and before this altar of the titillating, the suave, the ornamental womankind prostrated herself, pouring out homage and gold—the gold provided by patient fathers and husbands. It became a musical carnage, and a superior warrior like Liszt trailed after his chariot thousands of triumphal scalps. The mediaeval dancing manias were colorless compared with the hysteria evoked by this new Pied Piper of Hungary. Chopin had not the physique and Mendelssohn was too moral to cope with Liszt. This pair, the Pole and the German, wrote much feminine music, and down in Vienna a young man named Schubert sang incomparable lyrics and bequeathed us lovely piano music. His solo sonatas are not so feminine in textures as his Moments Musicales, impromptus, and dances; nevertheless his music, with its intimate, tender feeling, its loose, variegated structure, is fashioned for woman. Von Weber composed chivalric sonatas, also that charming epitome of the dance, "The Invitation to the Valse." Schumann dreamed twilight music, which his wife, greatly beloved Clara, interpreted for the disedification of an incredulous world. The rest is contemporary history. The modern Frenchmen are throughout feminine. Berlioz is a giant when posed before those two charming idols of musky Parisian alcoves, Gounod and Massenet.

It is said that the muscular comformation of a woman's arm militates against her throwing a stone as straight and as far as a man; but does this defect operate adversely in piano playing when the biceps muscles are demanded to produce a big, sonorous tone? I haven't noticed it when Guiomar Novaes, Ethel Leginska, Augusta Cottlow, Aurora Lacroix, Winifred Byrd, Olga Samaroff or any of the numerous choir of piano girls are attacking the keyboard. Certainly, when Sophie Menter and Teresa Carreno played Liszt or Tschaikovsky the effect was orchestral.

Last week I cohsidered the pros and cons of emotional intensity in the performances of women who played Chopin, and I do not propose to traverse again that barren and ungrateful region. The element of intellect remains to be discussed. Are women intellectual in the interpretative sense? Yes, for music, apart from its creative side, is a feminine art, and one in which her intuition leads her leagues toward success. That women have as yet exhibited powers of interpretation as keen, as original, as profound as men would be useless to assert. Illuminative in Bach or Beethoven they seldom are, poetic as they may be in Schumann and Chopin. I have yet to hear a woman play the Hammer-Klavier sonata, Opus 106 of Beethoven, with the force, lucidity and imaginative lift of Eugen d'Albert. The nearest approach to that little giant was Teresa Carreno, who was one of his wives, as he was one of her husbands. She was not only a great artiste, but a wonderful and beautiful woman. Perhaps she was joking when one day she told me that she had married d'Albert because of his unapproachable Beethoven playing. There is no denying the fact that when she returned to America after her unfortunate matrimonial venture with him she read Beethoven with a fuller comprehension, a broader conception, and a style that was purely Beethovian. Judged from the artistic viewpoint this particular marriage of Mme. Carreno had its compensations.

The lesson of the years seems to be that woman can play anything written for the piano, and play it as well as the average man. Let us again quote Balzac, quote that dear Princesse de Cadignan, sometimes called the Duchesse Maufrigneuse: "Women know how to give to their words a peculiar saintliness; they communicate to them * * * a vibration that extends the sense of their ideas and lends them profundity; if later the charmed auditor no longer recalls what they have said the idea has been completely attained, which is the proper quality of eloquence." And of this species of eloquence is a woman's playing of Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms. It is "different" in the sense of Stendhal, and it is often charming. But is it ever great, moving, spiritual art?

In an admirable study that is almost forgotten, although written not so many years ago, "Six Famous Women," the author, Laura Marholm, has written: "She"—Annie Besant—"has always possessed the wholly feminine capacity of assimilating the most varied and incompatible mental food without disturbance or indigestion, and of giving it forth with a certain accuracy. Her brain was like a photographic plate upon which the exposed picture is clearly and mechanically printed. These characteristics, the quick perception, and exact repetition are frequently praised by professors who examine female students, and many have declared that, in eagerness for knowledge and ability to acquire it, women excel men. It is undeniable that in these characteristics women excel most men; it would be a pity if most men excelled them, for these characteristics rest upon the lesser power and capacity for original thought, independent selection, and deeper affinity to the appropriate idea; they depend upon a mechanical instead of an organic process." It may be added that the time Mme. Marholm wrote "Six Famous Women" she was in the forefront of the Feminine Emancipation movement.

Jean de Reszké, when asked which Isolde, Marguerite, or Juliette he preferred to sing with, answered: "I always sing to my ideal woman," a diplomatic evasion considering that the charming artist sang with such equally charming artistes as Emma Eames, Emma Calvé, Nellie Melba. I fancy that we all pursue that illuding composite—the ideal woman. It is woman who composes the most beautiful music, who paints the most beautiful pictures, writes the poems, carves the statues—woman the inspirer of the seven arts. Is She, after all, our Coast of Bohemia? Then mankind from the torrid time of indifferentiated protozoa has been striving to acquire a footing upon that fascinating territory.

NOTES AND NEWS IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

FIVE MILLIONS for music may well set a new high mark in public benefaction toward the most beautiful of the arts. The amount has been exceeded in single gifts to America's greatest art museum, but never equaled, apparently, in donations for musical scholarships, free public concerts, and performances of novelties, the three objects mentioned in the trust bequest of the late A. D. Juilliard. A noteworthy feature was the sharing of his gift by the Metropolitan Opera Company, in which he had been a leading member of the owning or real estate corporation. The nearest approach to his legacy was a gift of $500,000 by the Loeb family of New York, which founded the Institute of Musical Art, or the Pulitzer million to the Philharmonic. A "curve" of comparison would be interesting with the figures of musical charities in former times.

The composer Handel, in his later years in England, raised $35,000 for the Foundling Hospital of London, this sum representing the receipts of annual performances of "The Messiah" in its chapel. It was in 1749 that he first arranged a performance of instrumental and vocal music in aid of the fund for finishing the chapel building. He then conducted his "musick for the late Fireworks, and the anthem on the Peace"; selections from the oratorio of "Solomon," relating to the dedication of the Temple, and several "pieces composed for the occasion, the words taken from Scripture, applicable to the charity and its benefactors." There was no collection, but the tickets were at half a guinea, and the audience above a thousand.

For his generosity, Handel was enrolled as one of the Governors and Guardians of the hospital, and during every subsequent year, adds Grove, while his health permitted, he directed the performance of "The Messiah" in the chapel, which yielded to the charity a net result of £7,000 in all. After his death a proposal by Dr. Burney to form a public music school at the hospital for the training of the children aroused "strong opposition," and it was never proceeded with. The annual concerts were recently revived, within the present century.

CHAMBER MUSIC AFIELD.

What is so rare as a day in June. If not the practice on such a day of serious and intimate forms of art, that of chamber music, for example? In season and out the New York Chamber Music Society, whose members have quit the safe harbor of established orchestras—have "walked the plank" that separates them from modest annual salaries—now must find unexplored areas and make landings afield, like the first airmen over the Atlantic. These artists, however, were never "at sea" in the making of plans, and it is good news that Miss Beebe and the ten men, former symphony players, who risked all on a new venture, have so early "sighted land."

It is in Connecticut, in their New York patrons' suburban and country homes, that the Chamber Music Society is giving concerts at a time of year when such concerts are unknown in town. Playing in private homes where often are great music rooms, with fine audiences to fill them, and often a built-in organ to enrich the instrumental ensemble, the leader and her associates have held two subscription series weekly during June. On a Monday at New Canaan Miss Beebe and Messrs. Langenus, Kefer, Guidi, and Franzl gave a quintet by Fibich and trios by Beethoven and Brahms.

A more ambitious series at Greenwich on Friday afternoons in June began with Miss Beebe and Mr. Guidi in sonatas for pianoforte and violin, by Handel and Grieg, while more recently a half dozen of the players, among them Mr. Kincaid, flute, and Henri de Busscher, oboe, as well as Ugo Savolini, bassoon, performed Thuille's sextet, Op. 6; Saint-Saëns' caprice, Op. 79, and a "Divertimento," by Paul Juon.

It is planned to continue similar concerts in private homes on the north shore of Long Island and on the Hudson next Fall.

BACH "PASSION" ECHOES.

The Bethlehem Bach Festival, an object of annual pilgrimage to Pennsylvania, and increasingly so during Dr. J. Fred Wolle's seventeen yearly performances of Bach's B minor Mass, was "in some respects the most beautiful we have ever held," writes Professor Raymond Walters of Lehigh University, the festival Secretary, in a letter to THE TIMES. As a local commentator wrote earlier this month: "Even the locusts, which arrive every seventeen years, had come in time to pitch their humming in the proper key." An audience from sixteen States and Canada heard the call of the oldest Moravian trombone player in Mr. Schwab's community, or in the United States.

From the tower of Packer Memorial Church many trombones summoned the faithful to what was formerly a simple religious observance of the valley, a long, long century and a half ago. The oldest present-day inhabitant could not remember a festival like this one, however, begun in a downpour of rain. The Bach chorales, eight in number, opening with themes of peace, which marked the first day's sessions, have already been told in this place.

On the second and final afternoon two sessions were again held, in close succession, at 2:30 and 4:30 o'clock. The Mass was sung, complete by a chorus of 250 men and women, many of them workers in the steel mills, who knew the rare music by heart. Dr. Wolle had assisting players again from the Philadelphia Orchestra, and the soloists for the two days included Mildred Faas, Florence Hinkle, Emma Roberts, Merle Alcock, Nicholas Douty, and Captain Charles T. Tittmann.

20TH NORFOLK FESTIVAL.

Two thousand persons hailed the twentieth anniversary festival of the Litchfield County Choral Union at Norfolk, Conn., in early June. Victor Kolar's "Lyric Suite" No. 2 was a novelty, led by the composer, who has been assistant conductor to the New York Symphony Society, and is to take up similar duty with the Detroit Philharmonic in the Fall. The chorus of 400 was heard in an opening ode, "Sweet Is Thy Work," by Robbins Battel, and parts of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha," for which the solo artists were Anna Case, Lambert Murphy, and Emilio de Gogorza.

Louise Homer appeared in her famous rôle in the second evening's program concert version of Saint-Saëns' "Samson and Delilah." The hero's part was sung by Orville Harrold, the High Priest by Mr. De Gogorza, and Abimelech by Leon Rothier. As usual, the festival conductors were Arthur Mees and Henry P. Schmitt. "The Star-Spangled Banner" began the second program, and after the "opera" the chorus and audience joined in Kremser's "Hymn of Thanksgiving."

Edgar Stillman Kelley's manuscript of "Alice in Wonderland," lost at Canaan station for a day, was recovered in time for the third and final concert in the Norfolk music shed. Mr. Kelley conducted his own music, following Nicola Lancella's "White House," founded on the Norfolk chimes. John Powell, the pianist, assisted in the other original composition, his "Rhapsodie Negre," and there were works of Stanford, Tschaikovsky, Gounod, and the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" at the end.
